SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Civil Rights During the Carter Administration, 1977–1981, Part 1: Papers of the Special Assistant for Black Affairs, Section A, compiles a large set of documents on significant civil rights issues, events, and personalities during the 1977–1981 presidency of Jimmy Carter. Reflecting the concern by both administration officials and minority group leaders that economic discrimination had become the most important manifestation of racial prejudice, the collection includes as much material on employment and minority business as on social topics like education and housing.

The documents are those collected by the office of Louis E. Martin, special assistant to the president, whose primary (but not sole) focus was on civil rights issues and minority affairs. Although most documents concern Black Americans, the collection contains interesting material on civil rights issues affecting Hispanics, Indians, and women.

Documents in the collection include internal White House memoranda, correspondence between White House and federal agency officials, government reports, invitation lists for major events, correspondence from individuals and organizations, and newspaper articles and editorials.

The collection includes significant material about, written, or spoken by prominent personalities including President Jimmy Carter; Vice President Walter F. Mondale; Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall; Special Assistant to the President Louis E. Martin and his key aides Julia M. Dobbs, I. Ray Miller Jr., and Karen W. Zuniga; administration officials Elizabeth Abramowitz, Clifford L. Alexander Jr., Randolph T. Blackwell, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Joseph A. Califano Jr., Hugh A. Carter Jr., Lloyd N. Cutler, Stuart E. Eizenstat, Patricia R. Harris, Meldon L. Hollis Jr., Hamilton Jordan, James T. McIntyre Jr., Jack Watson, Anne Wexler, and Andrew Young; congressional representatives Cardiss Collins, Walter E. Fauntroy, Jack Greenberg, Augustus F. Hawkins, Parris J. Mitchell, Charles B. Rangel, and Charles C. Diggs Jr.; civil rights leaders Aaron E. Henry, Benjamin Hooks, Jesse L. Jackson, Vernon E. Jordan Jr., Coretta Scott King, Joseph Lowery, Clarence Mitchell, and Leon H. Sullivan; and prominent personalities such as Muhammad Ali and William Raspberry.

One of the most significant features of this collection is its compilation of correspondence from a large number of minority associations, particularly Black organizations, on civil rights and minority-related issues. Officials from these groups often present forceful policy proposals to President Carter or to Louis Martin and his deputies. These organizations include African Institute for the Study of Humanistic Values, Alliance of Black Businesswomen, Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity, American Business Council, Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History, Black Business Association of Los Angeles, various Black colleges, Black Congress on Health and Law, Black Leadership Forum, Congress of National Black Churches, Congressional Black Caucus, Council of Urban League Guilds, Harlem Commonwealth Council, Joint

Center for Political Studies, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, Martin Luther King Jr. Center for Social Change, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, National Association of Manufacturers, National Association of Negro Business and Professional Women's Clubs, National Bar Association, National Black Network, National Black Think Tank, National Black Veterans' Organization, National Caucus on the Black Aged, National Conference of Black Mayors, National Council of Negro Women, National Organization for Women, National Urban Coalition, National Urban League, Southern Christian Leadership Conference, and United Negro College Fund.

The following sections outline the major topics covered by this collection.

Economic Problems

In its determination to close the economic gaps between the minority population and the rest of the country, the Carter administration expended great effort and resources on two broad-based initiatives. The first was a program to increase federal support for minority-owned businesses. The major impetus in this initiative was President Carter's directive to all federal executive departments and independent agencies requiring them to double the amount of procurement contracts they awarded to minority-owned businesses (Carter subsequently ordered agencies to triple procurement from minority firms).

In addition to the cross-agency thrust to increase procurement, grants were awarded to promising minority firms by the Commerce Department's Office of Minority Business Enterprise (OMBE), headed by the charismatic Randolph T. Blackwell. Interesting documents chronicle some of the success stories, such as minority-owned Southwest Alabama Farmers Cooperative Association's development of alcohol-based fuels. Another agency that supported small business, including minority firms, was the Small Business Administration (SBA) through its "8(a)" program, whose mandate was fostering the growth of community-based small businesses through support services, as well as through contract support and low-interest loans. The collection includes a number of documents describing problems with 8(a) encountered by minority business owners.

The second initiative addressed what President Carter, as well as most minority organizations, saw as the social problem most urgently in need of a fix: the high rate of unemployment among the minority population, especially youth. The administration established or expanded a number of programs to provide both jobs and job training for the unemployed, such as the Summer Youth Employment Program, a minority students' research apprenticeship program, and Jobs for Youth. The last program was a joint public-private partnership between federal agencies and Opportunities Industrialization Centers, a private organization headed by Leon H. Sullivan. Unstinting in his efforts to train and find jobs for disadvantaged youth, and widely respected both inside and outside the government, Sullivan was a Black leader who, in his pragmatic way, appears to have accomplished as much for his constituents as many more well-known figures.

This collection also includes significant bodies of material on other Carter administration initiatives to close the economic gap between whites and minorities. These initiatives include the Minority Bank Development Program and the Minority Broadcast Ownership Program.

Social Issues

Among the aspects of social inequality that Blacks and other minorities faced during the late 1970s, the most important, both to minority leaders and administration officials, concerned education. The administration promulgated a Black College Initiative to dramatically increase the involvement of federal agencies with historically Black colleges and universities. A large body of material in the collection documents the close interaction among the presidents of Black colleges, Special Assistant Louis Martin and his aides, and officials in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare as the groups sought to expand federal support of the colleges through means such as grants for research libraries or medical schools, as well as federal agency research and development contracts.

Although much progress had been made since the 1954 Supreme Court decision Brown v. Board of Education banning racial segregation, the 1979 White House ceremony marking the twenty-fifth anniversary of the decision provided an opportunity for assessing its long-term impact. President Carter, as well as many civil rights leaders, asserted that the nation needed to accomplish a great deal more if it were to attain the national goal of equal educational opportunity. Some minority writers noted the relationship between urban unrest and a lower quality of education in central cities. Well-known Black social scientist Kenneth Clark, for example, contended that, “the fact that our public schools are spawning hundreds of thousands of functional illiterates each year is the source, the cause of the circle of pathology in our ghettos. The fact that public schools provide criminally inferior non-education for these defenseless children and their parents, who are themselves victims of inferior education, will mean that there cannot really be a serious form of equal employment opportunity or affirmative action . . . because there will not be a sufficient number of youngsters who are trained in the basic academic skills to meet reasonable and rational requirements for entering high-level jobs” (Reel 9, Frame 0864).

Interesting sets of documents in the collection address other social inequities, such as discrimination in housing, the undercount of minorities in the decennial census, and the enforcement of equal employment opportunity laws by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. In a disturbing report on the hazards of being an inner-city resident, the National Research Council finds that pollution and other environmental factors in central cities appear to cause significantly higher mortality from hypertension, heart disease, bronchitis, emphysema, cancer, and birth defects than that experienced by suburban residents (Reel 8, Frame 0776).

The race riots in Miami, Florida, in the summer of 1980 caused great concern among Administration officials as well as civil rights leaders. As a means of constructively involving urban young people and lessening their anger, Special Assistant Martin proposed a voluntary peacetime national service program for youth.

The collection contains documents on a number of other topics, including U.S. foreign relations with Africa, the continuing sanctions against Rhodesia, a U.S. trade mission to Africa led by former U.S. Representative to the United Nations Andrew Young, the U.S.-led boycott of the 1980 Moscow Olympics in protest of the Soviet Union invasion of Afghanistan, anger over the failure of the administration to invite any Blacks to a state dinner for Chinese leaders, comparable resentment over the omission of Blacks from the invitation list for a domestic “summit meeting” on energy and inflation held at Camp David, and rules on White House staff members' political activity, campaign fund-raising, travel, gifts, and charitable donations.

White House Politics

Many documents in this collection portray the dynamic interaction of Louis E. Martin and his staff with other officials in the White House, as well as with federal agency officials and leaders of a large number of minority group organizations, which included many well-known figures in the civil rights movement.

Martin surrounded himself with outstanding assistants, including deputies Julia M. Dobbs, I. Ray Miller Jr., and (especially) Karen W. Zuniga, a brilliant, dynamic individual. While Martin was masterful in dealing with people and setting things in motion, Zuniga and Dobbs seemed to provide the force and energy to keep initiatives moving forward. These strong personalities were able to overcome some of the resistance displayed by certain federal agencies to the implementation of Administration policies, especially the Carter order to substantially increase federal procurement from minority-owned firms. Black members of Congress, perhaps most notably Parren J. Mitchell of Maryland, helped the White House staffers put pressure on the involved federal agencies.

The collection includes hundreds of letters to Martin from persons asking for his assistance in securing federal appointments (one of these persons was Condoleezza Rice), as well as from persons or groups requesting meetings with or appearances by the president, Martin, or other Administration officials. In addition, many business firms wrote to Martin, asking for whatever help he could provide in landing federal contracts.

A significant body of material in the collection documents the political give-and-take involved in developing the Democratic platform for the 1980 Democratic National Convention and the subsequent Carter-Mondale presidential election campaign. Martin and his allies campaigned, not always successfully, to include more minority-friendly planks in the platform. A number of minority organizations became increasingly critical during 1979 of the administration's policies toward Blacks and other minorities, culminating in the Congressional Black Caucus' refusal to endorse the reelection of President Carter. They were countered by loyal Carter supporters such as Rev. Jesse L. Jackson.

Several documents present item-by-item comparisons of the Democratic and Republican presidential platforms. One document (Reel 14, Frame 0939) seems to be an actual working draft of the Republican platform, full of handwritten revisions. One wonders how someone in the Carter-Mondale Campaign was able to gain possession of this presumably secret report.

While the Carter presidency produced no dramatic civil rights achievements such as those of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, it did make solid, if quieter, progress on such fronts as education, employment, and minority-owned business. One of the administration's most notable achievements came in the area of presidential appointments. The Carter years witnessed a dramatic increase in the number of Blacks and other minorities appointed to federal judgeships, as well as to high-level positions in the White House and federal departments and agencies. These developments took place concurrently with an increase in the number of Blacks elected to Congress. Special Assistant Martin said, "When I first came to Washington to work for JFK, I kept looking around for blacks. The situation was bleak in the executive agencies, [and] in Congress, there were barely enough black members and staff for a decent poker game, let alone a Black Caucus. Today, all that has changed.”

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 14: 0731 directs researchers to frame 0731 of Reel 14. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find topics listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

Civil Rights During the Carter Administration, 1977–1981, Part 1: Papers of the Special Assistant for Black Affairs, Section A, compiles a large set of documents on significant civil rights issues, events, and personalities during the 1977–1981 presidency of Jimmy Carter.

The documents are those collected by the office of Louis E. Martin, special assistant to the president, whose primary (but not sole) focus was on civil rights issues and minority affairs. Although most documents concern black Americans, the collection contains interesting material on civil rights issues affecting Hispanics, Indians, and women.

Interesting sets of documents in the collection address other social inequities, such as discrimination in housing, the undercount of minorities in the decennial census, and the enforcement of equal employment opportunity laws by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. In a disturbing report on the hazards of being an inner-city resident, the National Research Council finds that pollution and other environmental factors in central cities appear to cause significantly higher mortality from hypertension, heart disease, bronchitis, emphysema, cancer, and birth defects than that experienced by suburban residents.

While the Carter presidency produced no dramatic civil rights achievements such as those of the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, it did make solid, if quieter, progress on such fronts as education, employment, and minority-owned business. This microfilm collection presents important primary sources for researchers interested in this era in the history of civil rights in the United States.
