NOTE ON SOURCES

The records of the Kerner Commission are located at the Lyndon Baines Johnson Library, Austin, Texas, Record Group 282, Records of Temporary Committees, Commissions, and Boards. These files document the Commission's creation and contain the working papers of its operation and preparation for the Final Report.

EDITORIAL NOTE

Executive Order #11365, establishing the Kerner Commission, provided for the publication of an Interim Report by March 1, 1968, and a Final Report by July 29, 1968. Since time was an essential factor, the Commission decided in December 1967 that the Interim and Final Reports would be issued as a single report by March 1, 1968. In this way the major conclusions and recommendations of the Commission might be applied so that a recurrence of the previous summer's disorders could be avoided in the summer of 1968.

Dr. Steven F. Lawson, collection editor, selected material from the voluminous holdings (219 cubic feet) that detail the Commission's investigation stages and resulting accumulated information. Reproduced are the subject [office] files of its staff—executive director, investigations director, congressional relations director, and associate director for public safety—as well as Commissioner Fred R. Harris's files, including internal reports, research obtained from consultants and government agencies, and correspondence with public officials and private citizens. Finally, the collection offers complete transcripts of the Commission's extensive hearings.

INTRODUCTION

When President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act into law on August 6, 1965, many Americans considered the goals of the civil rights movement fulfilled. A year earlier, Congress had passed a comprehensive statute barring racial segregation in public accommodations, expanding federal enforcement of public school integration, and providing legal machinery to combat employment bias. Together with the suffrage law, these measures went a long way toward demolishing Jim Crowism and opening up the political system to Afro-Americans. However, jubilation over passage of these long-awaited proposals came to an abrupt end. On August 11, less than a week after President Johnson authorized the enfranchisement of thousands of southern blacks, an explosive riot in the Watts section of Los Angeles, California, shattered the sense of elation over these recent achievements.

The eruption in Watts was more destructive than any of the race riots that had broken out in several cities a year earlier. Violence during these "long, hot summers" continued throughout the rest of the 1960s, reaching a peak in 1967. That year saw rioting mainly in northern cities, most prominently Newark and Detroit, which left over ninety people dead, more than four thousand wounded, and some seventeen thousand arrested. Following the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., the next year, violence consumed the ghettos of over one hundred cities, including the nation's capital, leaving another forty-six killed and more than three thousand injured. Overall, from 1965 to 1968, approximately a half-million blacks in three hundred cities participated in these upheavals that resulted in fifty thousand arrests, eight thousand injuries, and more than $100 million in property damage.

These convulsions were sparked by black rage in urban ghettos chiefly in the North, though some southern cities such as Tampa, Florida, were gripped by rioting. Unlike the South where the civil rights movement had centered, in the North blacks could vote and did not encounter racial segregation by law. Instead, the rioters' complaints stemmed from a lack of real economic and political power. Their furious outbursts expressed genuine discontent with living conditions in the ghettos—slum housing, rat infestation, unemployment, police brutality, and a lack of control over local institutions. The burning and looting that accompanied these riots displayed the pent-up anger against white law enforcement officers and merchants who were perceived as the most visible agents of white exploitation in the black community. The menacing cries of "Burn Baby Burn" and "Get Whitey" replaced the soothing calls for "Black and White Together" that had originally guided the civil rights struggle.

The riots polarized white Americans and brought mixed results for blacks. One response was for federal, state, and local governments to appropriate funds and establish crash programs to alleviate some of the grievances highlighted by the bloody uprisings. More commonly, however, white officials and their constituents advocated tough measures to repress the rioters, who were seen as common criminals and not as freedom fighters. The force of this white backlash helped propel the segregationist governor of Alabama, George Wallace, as a serious presidential candidate and contributed to the election of the conservative Richard Nixon to the White House in 1968. In the political arena, the advocates of "Law and Order" triumphed over the proponents of "Equality and Justice," and a crucial phase of the civil rights era ended.

During this turbulent period, the Johnson administration mirrored the conflicts within the electorate. On the one hand, the president remained sympathetic to the traditional goals of the civil rights movement and understood the continuing frustration felt by impoverished blacks. His War on Poverty programs attempted to address their despair. Furthermore, in 1968, Johnson succeeded in obtaining from a hesitant Congress a major civil rights law dealing with equal access to housing. On the other hand, the chief executive felt betrayed by the rioters, took offense at their lack of gratitude for what he had accomplished in his Great Society, and became embittered with black leaders like Dr. King, who criticized his programs for not going far enough. Preoccupied emotionally with and drained financially by the Vietnam War, Johnson lacked both the energy and resources to fight a full-scale war against poverty and the remnants of racial discrimination at home.

The creation of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders on July 27, 1967, underscored Johnson's dilemma. Chaired by Otto Kerner, Democratic governor of Illinois, this eleven-member, bipartisan panel conducted a detailed investigation into the riots and issued its far-reaching report on March 1, 1968. The findings were grim. Even after more than a decade of civil rights and economic reform, the Kerner Commission concluded, the United States was "moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal." The committee blamed the riots on the wretched conditions in which blacks were forced to live in the ghettos and on the white racism that perpetuated them. To remedy this situation, the Kerner Commission recommended a massive and costly governmental assault on unemployment, poor housing, and poverty.

Neither the president, who was entering his final year in office, nor his growing conservative opposition was interested in waging such a struggle. Johnson ignored his committee's suggestions, and those riding the crest of the white blacklash denounced them. The latter dismissed the conclusions of the Commission as the product of "bleeding heart liberals," and instead blamed the instigation of the riots on criminals, Communists, and black nationalists. Rather than embracing sweeping social programs that would coddle lawbreakers, they proposed harsher penalties for perpetrators of violence.

Although the recommendations of the Kerner Commission generally went unheeded in a hostile political climate, its investigation holds great significance for historians, sociologists, political scientists, and students of public policy. The agency's hearings furnish a rich source of data related to social and economic conditions existing in American cities in the 1960s. The panel took testimony from over 130 witnesses during twenty days of questioning and heard the views of federal, state, and local officials as well as civil rights leaders, ghetto residents, business and labor leaders, and scholars. Its professional staff conducted intensive field surveys of twenty-three cities and drew riot profiles of ten disorders. The abundant records of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders that are housed in the Lyndon B. Johnson Presidential Library offer striking accounts of these major racial crises. Over 30,000 pages from this extensive collection have been microfilmed and contain transcripts of hearings, task force and consultant reports, staff files, and correspondence.

This material will help reconstruct the struggle of ordinary Americans who desperately sought to transform the quality of their lives. At the same time, it will aid in understanding the varied responses of public officials who had to cope with these violent confrontations. In addition to detailed information on the inner-city conditions that sparked the disorders, this archival collection reveals the day-to-day chronology of the riots, the amount of violence and destruction, reaction by police and National Guard units, and community attitudes toward the rioters. These documents vividly portray the growth of radicalism in the black freedom struggle, the changing contours of race relations in the 1960s, and the consequences for the future.

Two decades later, the work of the Kerner Commission still has relevance for a society that continues to face virtually the same problems in its inner cities. What the Commission so eloquently stated then ought to be remembered today: "This nation will deserve neither safety nor progress unless it can demonstrate the wisdom and the will to undertake decisive action against the root causes of racial disorder."

REEL INDEX

The following is a guide to the documents found in this micropublication. The four-digit frame number on the left side of the page under the heading "Document Frame #" represents where in the microfilm each document begins. File folder titles and the box number from which the material was filmed are indicated by bold lettering. To provide further identification of certain types of documents for the researcher, frame numbers and identifying material have been indented under the document name. Instances where this occurs are the transcripts in Series 1, the city analyses reports in Series 47, and the field team interviews in Series 59. Listed in the transcripts are the names of individuals or groups providing testimony, statements, and memoranda before the Commission and their affiliation. In the City Analyses reports, UPA has listed each of the cities involved, the date of the analysis, and the date of the report. The field team interviews of various community leaders, local officials, and residents are found in the Subject Files of Robert Conot. UPA has listed the individual or group, their title, and, when possible, the date of the interview.

While undated documents are indicated by n.d., in Series 1, which is divided by meeting dates, dates are only provided for documents not generated at that particular meeting. "Commission" always refers to the Kerner Commission, and its interchangeable use of the terms meeting and hearing is reflected throughout this micropublication.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major subjects of this collection. The first Arabic number refers to the reel, and the Arabic number after the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular subject begins. Hence, 3: 0934 directs the researcher to the subject that begins at frame 0934 of Reel 3. By referring to the Reel Index that constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher can find the main entry for this subject.

Throughout the Subject Index, as in the Reel Index, "Commission" refers specifically to the Kerner Commission.
