MANUSCRIPT DIVISION

The Papers of

JAMES A. FARLEY

The papers of James A. Farley (1888-1976), businessman, politician, and Postmaster General of the United States, were deposited and then given to the Library of Congress by Mr. Farley between 1965 and 1969. Additional items were obtained by purchase in 1971, by gifts of Emil Hurja from 1937 to 1942, and by donation of Mr. Farley's son, James A. Farley, Jr., in 1983.

Literary rights in the unpublished writings of James A. Farley in these papers and in other collections of papers in the custody of the Library of Congress have been dedicated to the public.

The private file and scrapbooks, formerly in containers 37-46 and 84-204, were microfilmed in 1986 and are now available on 54 reels for purchase from the Library's Photoduplication Service or for interlibrary loan from the Library's Loan Division. Ten reels may be requested at a time for a loan period of one month. The shelflist for the scrapbooks is reproduced at the beginning of reel 1.

Motion picture films, prints, photographs, and recordings received with the James A. Farley papers have been transferred to the appropriate divisions of the Library of Congress, where they are identified as part of this collection.

Linear feet of shelf space occupied: 70.4

Scope and Content Note

The papers of James A. Farley span the years 1790 to 1976, with the bulk of the items concentrated in the period 1918 to 1976. The collection includes general correspondence, a Presidential file, private file, subject files, speeches and writings, and a large series of scrapbooks and other miscellaneous printed matter. The focus is on Farley's political career and connections, although a great deal of the material after 1940 also concerns his public relations activity on behalf of the Coca Cola Export Corporation and his personal involvements with commercial and service organizations, Irish-American societies, the Catholic Church, professional sports, and world leaders whom he met socially in the course of many foreign travels.

The richest portion of the Farley papers are those segments which reflect his role as Franklin D. Roosevelt's campaign manager and as Postmaster General of the United States. Documented in every series of the collection, his relation to Roosevelt and the New Deal is especially well traced in the Presidential file and in the private file of confidential logs or memoranda he dictated to himself as a record of important events. The Presidential file contains a variety of documentation regarding the Roosevelt White House, including letters with First Lady Eleanor, whom Farley often consulted on political matters, and correspondence with other members of the Roosevelt family and staff. The private files, begun sporadically in 1918, swell in volume and significance after 1932 and lessen again after Farley's break with Roosevelt on the issue of the third term. In addition to containing inside descriptions of Cabinet meetings, the private files offer day-to-day evaluations of Roosevelt's political standing during critical phases of the New Deal. They also render occasional assessments of other Cabinet officers and advisers, and give firsthand accounts of major patronage issues, personality conflicts, and Farley's private visits with the President.

The general correspondence of the Farley papers covers a wide chronological span featuring the Postmaster General's many prominent acquaintances. Consisting mostly of letters received, the series is a veritable autograph collection of leading personages of 20th-century America. Present in addition to the signatures of innumerable politicians, judges, Cabinet officers, diplomats, and legislators of national significance are those of actors, boxers, baseball players, newspaper and reporters, businessmen, and socialites. There is also considerable correspondence with officials of the Catholic Church, including several Cardinals and Pope Pius XII, and with the foreign heads of state of many American allies from the period, such as Winston Churchill, Haile Selassie, General Madame Chiang Kai-shek, General Francisco Franco, and Anastasio Somoza.

The subject file in this collection consists of various personal, financial, and genealogical data, but is strongest in its documentation of Democratic Party politics. Included in the files for the Presidential campaign of 1936, for instance, are transcripts of ad hoc discussions regarding local and regional election conditions, transcripts of Chairman Farley's press conferences, and a campaign book detailing state reports as they were received by the Democratic National Committee prior to the vote. Other files of significance cover narrower issues. Examples include New York State politics, Farley's home base; Louisiana Senator Huey Long, who before his assassination had become a perennial nemesis of the Postmaster General; and the 18th amendment, which Farley opposed and helped to repeal.

Two final series, the speeches and writings and miscellany files, cover the full range of Farley's activities. Partially indexed, the speech file is notable for what must be a virtually complete record of his talks as Postmaster General. The miscellany is also notable for its completeness, in this case for the absolute thoroughness of the more than 100 scrapbooks which Farley and his family or staff compiled from about 1923 until his death in 1976.

In addition to Roosevelt, Farley corresponded with every President and most First Ladies from Herbert Hoover to Gerald Ford. Among the more frequent of the Presidential correspondents were Hoover, Harry Truman and Bess Wallace Truman, John F. Kennedy, and Lyndon and Lady Bird Johnson. Other important correspondents whose letters appear regularly in these papers are Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., Claude G. Bowers, Homer Cummings, Eamonn De Valera, Denis J. Cardinal Dougherty, John Nance Garner, Carter Glass, Louis McHenry Howe, Cordell Hull, Harold Ickes, Breckinridge Long, Sean T. O'Kelly, Al Smith, William Woodin, and Harry Woodring.
