Once the bulk of the papers and tapes from the five-andone-half years Richard Milhous Nixon served in the White House are released, his presidency will become the best documented in United States history. Because of Nixon's unprecedented forced resignation from office in 1974, little about his truncated administration appears normal in retrospect, including the complicated problems surrounding his presidential papers. The sheer magnitude of the collection overwhelms scholars and nonspecialists alike. There are, for example, forty million pages of documents in the White House Central Files and 4,000 hours of recorded conversations. At the end of 1987, only three million documents and $12\frac{1}{2}$ hours of tapes had been opened, because unlike other sets of presidential papers, Watergate-related congressional legislation and a web of litigation have prevented the release for research of a vast majority of the least controversial of this unique collection of Nixon White House documents and tapes. As Watergate events unfolded in 1973 and 1974, questions about access to, and protection of, documents generated by the Nixon administration assumed prominence. In May 1973, both presidential counselor Leonard Garment and Elliot Richardson, then Attorney General, advised Nixon to place the papers of H. R. Haldeman. John Ehrlichman, and John Dean under the protection of the FBI. Nixon agreed on the condition that there be no access to these papers "without written presidential consent." Executive privilege became the issue of the day as Congress demanded and the President refused to produce those records and tapes deemed pivotal for the resolution of an unprecedented national constitutional crisis. Although the courts ultimately overruled Nixon's claims of executive privilege during the course of the various Watergate investigations, after Nixon left office he signed an agreement with Arthur Sampson, head of the General Services Administration (GSA), that mandated the destruction of the tapes and allowed considerable opportunity for destruction of some presidential papers as well. This September 1974 Nixon-Sampson agreement came into existence when the National Archives and Records Service (NARS) was under the jurisdiction of GSA, and so the Archivist of the United States had not been involved in its negotiation.

The Nixon-Sampson agreement created an archival firestorm that swept through both the halls of Congress and the scholarly community of researchers. Signed without the knowledge of the National Archives, it not only gave Nixon wide latitude in controlling access to the papers of his controversial administration, but also left in doubt whether they would ever be donated through the National Archives to a presidential library and made available for study, as had the papers of all other occupants of the White House since Herbert Hoover. Never before had the preservation of an entire documentary record of a single administration become an issue of national scholarly and journalistic concern; never before had access to records been so personalized for the American public.

In the immediate wake of the President's resignation over Watergate, criticism of the Nixon-Sampson agreement predictably resulted in unparalleled congressional action. In December 1974, President Gerald Ford approved legislation dramatically altering the control that previous Presidents had exercised over materials produced during their time in office, thus ultimately producing new archival procedures for processing such papers. This 1974 Presidential Recordings and Materials Preservation Act: 1) authorized the seizing of all Nixon documents and tapes, placing them in control of the federal government; and 2) mandated that any abuse-of-power information in this presidential material be made available to the public as soon as possible. Consequently, federal archivists of the National Archives and Records Service of the GSA (now an independent agency known as the National Archives and Records Administration, or NARA) began to establish guidelines for reviewing all of the documents and tapes from the White House Central Files.

This review process was complicated by the fact that the 1974 Act was not exclusive; that is, it included both the official and the unofficial Nixon material in the government's custody. This has meant that archivists have had to cull from these presidential papers all private and personal material relating solely to the President's family or other nonpublic activities, including "private political associations." The latter category proved particularly troublesome in the processing of not only the "Special Files," but also for the bulk of the Central Files as well, because most of the Nixon documents have some political content and few are concerned exclusively with the private political association of the person who wrote or received the document. The new review process has also delayed the release of Nixon-related material. Since FDR, major portions of the papers of other modern presidents have been opened within a half-dozen years after the end of their terms in office, but the least controversial materials from the Nixon years have languished unprocessed, in part because of this extremely complicated and litigious review process.

For three years Nixon challenged the 1974 Act in the courts to prevent the release of the Special Files. Ironically, this Special Files Unit had been originally created in September 1972 within the Nixon White House to provide a separate storage location for documents removed from the Central Files and selected staff members' offices because they were considered "sensitive." They included the complete files of the staff secretary, the President's Office, and the offices of H. R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman, John Dean, and Charles Colson.

In 1977, after the Supreme Court upheld the 1974 Presidential Recordings and Materials Act as constitutional, it took another two years for attorneys representing the former President and federal archivists to work out an agreement permitting NARA to systematically screen and prepare for research purposes the Special Files and the White House tapes. In February 1979, this unusual "negotiated agreement" called for the permanent removal of "any political document in the files that did not have a direct connection to the President's constitutional powers or statutory duties" and the return of these documents to Nixon with the understanding that "he would donate them in the future to the National Archives." Because of these and other unique procedures, the processing of the Nixon papers did not begin until five years after he resigned as President. Since that time, Nixon and/or his key aides have brought additional suits attempting to prevent the opening of documents in these controversial Special Files. In the interim, archivists have reduced the volume of the Nixon Special Files by six percent; legal representatives of the former President and members of his administration have withdrawn another ten percent. Although users can request mandatory reviews of both sets of winnowed material, the historical record of the Nixon administration has at least temporarily been diminished. In the event that some of these documents are reviewed once again by federal archivists, the former President can still challenge their release through the courts. Thus the specter of protracted litigation still hangs over these contested pages.

Subsequent to the 1979 "negotiated agreement," NARA drafted six sets of regulations under which both the most sensitive materials, along with the most commonplace ones from the voluminous Nixon White House Central Files, would be processed. Previous sets had been revised or dropped because of congressional or legal actions. Before obtaining approval in 1986 from the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to publish the sixth set in the Federal Register, the National Archives was given a Justice Department memorandum, attached to but not published with these regulations, that unequivocally stated that Nixon could still invoke executive privilege over these documents, and that President Ronald Reagan or any future sitting President would have to honor the claim without reviewing the merits. Litigation on this memorandum was still pending in March 1988.

The 4,000 hours of tape recordings pose even thornier archival and access problems. It would take a single person almost two years of non-stop listening for eight hours a day just to hear all of the tapes without taking time to review or analyze them. Although NARA has basically completed processing the tapes and prepared a 27,000-page finding aid for researchers, lawyers for Nixon and some of his top advisers claim that untold numbers of violations of the personal privacy of individuals remain. They argue that the review process agreed to in the 1979 "negotiated agreement" has not been proven feasible with respect to those controversial secret tapings, and that, therefore, they should be reviewed again using stricter privacy standards.

In the unlikely event that no further legal barriers are encountered, sometime during the 1990s the National Archives intends to open those recorded conversations that the Watergate special prosecutor requested (not all of these were used as evidence and, hence, were made public in various court cases after 1974). After these initial eighty hours of special prosecutor tapes are opened, NARA will follow its regulations and release additional segments, similar to the manner in which the first Special Files documents began to be released sequentially in 1987. This means that all persons mentioned in the recordings who have requested that they be notified in advance will be, in the event they would want to file charges against the release of specific conversations. Thus, even with the Tape Survey Log, researchers face many delays and obstacles before they will be able to analyze and interpret this unique documentary source-the White House tapes.

Other unusual characteristics of the Nixon presidential papers involve the subject matter of the records released to date and contained in various parts of the microfiche editions published by University Publications of America. The first is that most of the obvious abuse-of-power documents had already been presented as evidence and made public when various Nixon aides and their staff members were tried in the last half of the 1970s. Consequently, journalists, but not historians, were generally disappointed and confused by the release of the first records from the White House Central Files, because they did not contain sensational revelations. The initial 1.5 million pages of documents opened in December 1986 focused on domestic subject files ranging from welfare and environmental issues to Supreme Court appointments and desegregation of schools. These files are of enormous historic, if not headline, value to aid in understanding the formulation of the major domestic policies of the one-and-one-half Nixon administrations.

Secondly, those papers released in May and July 1987 consisted of 1.5 million documents that make up the total volume of the Special Files. These were purported to be of particular importance to the abuse-of-power question, but have not yet revealed any significant information about the Watergate breakin or its cover-up that had not already been presented as evidence in court cases in the 1970s. The first opening in May, for example, included five major file groups of papers relating to the work in the White House of John Dean, Harry Dent, John Ehrlichman, Egil Krogh, and Gordon Strachan.

The second opening in May contained 267,500 papers actually created or seen by Richard Nixon during his tenure in office. These included both the President's Office Files, with notations in Nixon's handwriting, and "Personal Files" for 1969-1974, in addition to segments of the papers of Desmond J. Barker, Jr. (2,500 pages); Patrick J. Buchanan (22,500 pages); Dwight L. Chapin (35,000 pages); Peter M. Flanigan (12,500 pages); David R. Gergen (2,500 pages); General Alexander M. Haig, Jr. (40,000 pages); Kenneth L. Khachigian (25,000 pages); Herbert G. Klein (5,000 pages); Tom C. Korologos (2,500 pages); Frederic V. Malek (2,500 pages); John A. Scali (5,000 pages); Gerald L. Warren (2,500 pages); David R. Young, Jr. (22,500 pages); and Ronald L. Ziegler (42,500 pages).

At the July 1987 opening, 823,450 more papers from the Special Files were released, consisting of 353,600 pages created or maintained by Nixon's Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman and 108,800 pages by Special Counsel Charles Colson. Other segments opened at the same time included: John R. Brown III (2,400 pages); Stephen B. Bull (4,000 pages); Alexander P. Butterfield (10,000 pages); J. Fred Buzhardt (4,000 pages); Michael J. Farrell (1,600 pages); Edwin L. Harper (800 pages); David C. Hoopes (25,000 pages); W. Richard Howard (5,000 pages); Peter E. Millspaugh (1,600 pages); Terrence O'Donnell (1,600 pages); Peter G. Peterson (2,400 pages); Geoffrey C. Shepard (2,400 pages); Hugh W. Sloan, Jr. (1,610 pages); Richard C. Tufaro (2,000 pages); J. Bruce Whelihan (8,400 pages); and David G. Wilson (1,600 pages).

Thirdly, these first historic openings of the Nixon presidential papers are but the tip of the iceberg for researching this controversial and important administration, especially its best known activity outside of Watergate, namely, foreign policy. Unfortunately, national security considerations have prevented any systematic declassification of materials pertaining to Nixon's record in the field of foreign affairs. Despite the publicity it receives, the Freedom of Information Act is not an adequate historical tool for obtaining the necessary aggregate data to document the decision-making processes involved in formulating U.S. diplomacy for Nixon's or any other recent administration. Moreover, the National Security Council, responsible for declassification of most foreign policy documents, has not yet concentrated on the Nixon years. To make matters worse for those interested in studying the diplomacy of the United States from 1969 through 1974, crucial foreign policy advisers such as Henry Kissinger and Alexander

Haig have established personal monopolies over both public and private documents they generated by depositing them with the Library of Congress, thus making them subject to more severe restrictions than now govern Nixon's papers.

Finally, the question of the establishment of a Nixon Presidential Library remains problematic sixteen years after the thirty-seventh President resigned under a constitutional cloud of unprecedented proportions. After several major academic institutions turned down offers for housing the papers of what will become the most completely documented U.S. administration, the former President first decided to build his library in the seaside town of San Clemente, California, once the site of the western White House. Then, in November 1987, it was announced that the $25 million complex would be built in the southern California town of Yorba Linda, where Nixon was born in 1913. While the museum opened in 1990, no agreement has been reached with the government about housing the Nixon presidential papers there.

As of the end of 1987, the Richard M. Nixon Presidential Archives Foundation planned to build a library that would be entirely independent of the National Archives, unlike all the other presidential libraries in the country. Until the resultant stalemate between the government and Nixon's representatives is resolved, his presidential papers will remain in federal custody at the NARA facility in Alexandria, Virginia. This means that the Nixon Presidential Library will contain primarily his postpresidential papers (the bulk of his vice presidential papers have long since been donated to the federal government) and assorted family material.

The Nixon Presidency

The delays encountered in opening the Nixon White House Central Files is particularly unfortunate in light of historical inquiry into an administration that may well be the most significant one since World War II and one of the most important in this entire century. Richard Milhous Nixon became President of the United States at a crucial juncture in American history. Following the Second World War there was general agreement between popular and elite opinion on two things: the effectiveness of most New Deal domestic policies and the necessity of most Cold War foreign policies. During the 1960s, however, these two crucial postwar consensual constructs began to break down, and the war in Indochina, with its disruptive. impact on the nation's political economy, hastened their disintegration. By 1968 the traditional bipartisan, Cold War approach to the conduct of foreign affairs had been seriously undermined. Similarly, the "bigger and better" New Deal approach to the modern welfare state had reached a point of diminishing returns even among liberals.

A breakdown in either the foreign or domestic policy consensus offers both opportunity and danger to any incumbent President. Nixon had more opportunity for risk-taking changes at home and abroad during his first administration than he would have had if elected in 1960, when he was narrowly defeated by John F. Kennedy, because of the disruptive impact of war and domestic reforms during the intervening eight years. Also, he inherited a wartime presidency, with all of its temporarily enhanced extralegal powers. Although Nixon was a wartime President for all but twenty months of his five-andone-half years in office, he found that the impunity for constitutional violations that was often accorded previous wartime presidents was not to be his.

Periods of war and reform have usually alternated in the United States, but in the 1960s they burgeoned simultaneously, hastening the breakdown of consensus that was evident by the 1968 election. This unusual situation transformed Nixon's largely unexamined and rather commonplace management views into controversial ones. It also reinforced his natural predilection for bringing about change through executive fiat. This historical confluence of war and reform accounted in part for many of Nixon's unilateral administrative actions during his first administration, and for some of the events leading to his disgrace over the Watergate cover-up and resignation during his second term.

Because much of the press and both Democratic-controlled houses of Congress were suspicious of him in 1969, Nixon almost automatically viewed administrative action as one way of obtaining significant domestic reform. Moreover, some of his initial accomplishments in administratively redirecting U.S. foreign policy ultimately led Nixon to rely more on executive actions at home to accomplish certain domestic goals than he might have otherwise. In any case, this approach drew criticism from those who already distrusted his past and presumed present policies and priorities. Nixon's covert and overt expansion and prolongation of the war during his first term also reinforced existing suspicions about his personality and political ethics. In this sense, liberal paranoia about his domestic programs fueled Nixon's paranoia about liberal opposition to the war and vice versa.

By 1972, Nixon's success in effecting structural and substantive change in foreign policy through the exercise of largely unilateral executive power increasingly led him to think that he could use the same preemptive administrative approach to resolving domestic problems, especially following his landslide electoral victory that year. By the time he resigned from office in 1974, Nixon had effected significant structural changes in the organization of the executive branch of government-many of which are still in place. For example, he replaced the Department of the Post Office with a public corporation theoretically less subject to political patronage; merged the Peace Corps and Vista into one agency called Action; and created five new domestic advisory boards: the Urban Affairs Council that circuitously evolved into the Domestic Council; the Council on Environmental Quality (this was established at the initiative of Congress, but was effectively staffed and utilized by Nixon); the Rural Affairs Council; the Council on Executive Reorganization; and the Council on International Economic Policy (CIEP).

The Nixon administration also established the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) and recommended that the functions of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) be divided into two new agencies-the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and the Energy Research and Development Administration, both of which came into existence under President Gerald Ford. The Nixon administration also created the Office of Child Development and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. With Nixon's approval the Bureau of the Budget was transformed into the Office of Management and Budget, whose monitoring and investigative powers gave it greater influence than ever before on the budgets of all government agencies and departments. Although Nixon tried to implement certain reorganizational (and ideological) ideas by temporarily impounding federal funds and attempting to abolish the Office of Economic Opportunity, federal courts subsequently ruled against these actions.

Probably the most important reorganizational activity of the Nixon administration involved the National Security Council (NSC). With Nixon's strong encouragement, Henry Kissinger transformed the NSC system into a personal foreign policy secretariat within the White House. As head of the reformed and revitalized NSC, Kissinger occupied the "superofficial" position of assistant to the President for national security affairs, with more powers than those who, since Eisenhower's presidency, had served as special assistants for national security affairs. Ultimately, Kissinger chaired six special committees operating just below the NSC level, including the controversial Committee of 40, which oversaw all covert CIA activity abroad.

The reorganized NSC also created a conceptual framework for formulating U.S. foreign policy by establishing a series of National Security Study Memoranda (NSSMs). These were drafted by NSC staff and signed by Nixon or by Kissinger on behalf of the President. The NSSMs directed various agencies and interdepartmental groups within the government to prepare detailed policy or "area" options, not policy recommendations, which were then passed on by Kissinger to members of the National Security Council, who sometimes argued over them in Nixon's presence. However, since these "formal options" were written, Nixon did not always need them orally debated by the NSC.

Nixon seems to have relied most heavily on these NSSMs in his first two years in office and less so in subsequent years. The NSSM system was designed to prevent the State Department and other executive departments from becoming advocates of particular policies by relegating them to the roles of analysts rather than policymakers. According to political scientist Alexander George, this "Nixinger" system for formulating foreign policy became the "most centralized and highly structured model yet employed by any American President." It is this system with minor variations that is still operative almost twenty years after its creation.

It is sometimes said that, when Nixon created the Urban Affairs Council (UAC) with its colorful executive secretary Patrick Moynihan, this made Moynihan the Henry Kissinger of domestic policy, because the UAC was presumably based on the emerging NSC model. Such a comparison has proven misleading for a number of reasons, not the least of which was Moynihan's lack of attention to management skills. Moreover, Moynihan's presence in the White House was always more tenuous than Kissinger's, not only because he was a Democrat, but also because Nixon had appointed as counselor to the President for domestic affairs, Arthur Burns, whose views opposed and often neutralized those of the head of the UAC.

Despite the lack of centralization that characterized the structure for formulating foreign policy, Nixon's first administration actively pursued five areas of domestic reform: welfare, civil rights, economic and environmental policy, and reorganization of the federal government. In all these areas, even though his welfare reform failed to pass Congress, Nixon's positive domestic programs may be remembered longer than his currently better known foreign policy activities, because fewer of them have been dismantled or neglected by his successors in the White House.

Obviously, the domestic record of Richard Milhous Nixon will forever remain tarnished by a negative series of events, including wiretaps, the creation of the "plumbers" unit within the White House to plug information leaks and ultimately to conduct break-ins, the harassment of individuals on an "enemies" list, the misuse of the CIA to infiltrate and investigate a variety of protest organizations, and temporary consideration given to the "Houston Plan," which would have institutionalized surveillance of suspect groups and individuals. These events climaxed with the Watergate break-ins in May and June 1972 and the subsequent attempts by the President and his closest aides to cover up these and other illegal acts.

While Watergate was probably an accident waiting to happen, given the "hardball" nature of U.S. politics by 1972, this does not excuse the break-ins or the cover-up that resulted in a President of the United States resigning before he could be impeached for obstructing justice. However, if historians or other students of the American presidency continue to insist that Richard Nixon was an aberration, rather than an all too common product of the American political system, as a people we will have learned little from Watergate. It is time to reevaluate, rather than simply rehash the positive as well as the negative lessons from the administration of the thirty-seventh President of the United States. This microfiche edition of the first papers released from the Nixon White House Central Files makes such a scholarly reevaluation possible outside the facilities of the National Archives in Washington, D.C., and Alexandria, Virginia.

INTRODUCTION TO H.R. HALDEMAN: NOTES OF WHITE HOUSE MEETINGS

This introduction describes the Haldeman Notes, a subfile of the White House Special Files, Papers of Harry R. Haldeman. This subfile has been microfiched and constitutes Part 5 of UPA's Papers of the Nixon White House series.

H.R. Haldeman began his political career as an advance man for Richard Nixon's 1956 vice presidential campaign; subsequently, he worked in Nixon's 1960 presidential campaign as tour manager, in the 1962 California gubernatorial campaign as manager, and in the 1968 presidential campaign as chief of staff. Haldeman's official title while he served in the White House was assistant to the President, but in fact, he operated as the President's chief administrative officer and chief of staff. Haldeman's many responsibilities included those of staff manager, timekeeper, and communications director. Directing the operation of the President's appointments secretary and the White House staff secretary were Haldeman's two most important and time-consuming duties.

The planning of the President's daily schedule was a grueling and ever-changing process. Cabinet members, senior government officials, White House staffers, congressmen, senators, governors, labor leaders, businessmen, campaign contributors, foreign officials, and many others all wanted to meet the President to lobby for their own issues. It was Haldeman's duty to select those individuals or groups who would meet with the President; to this end, Haldeman met frequently with President Nixon to discuss who the President wanted to see and who Haldeman thought really needed to see the President.

It was the role of the White House staff secretary to provide the President with information he requested and to distribute instructions from the President to the White House staff and members of the executive branch. Haldeman directed this vast operation, making sure that directives from the President were acted upon. Usually it was Haldeman who personally recorded these directives from the President.

In H.R. Haldeman, Richard Nixon had a loyal and longterm assistant who was both a master of detail and a hard taskmaster for the White House staff and members of the executive branch. This allowed the President to concentrate on policy, politics, and public relations, and to avoid timeconsuming details and personal confrontations. Haldeman became an extremely powerful figure, as he controlled both whom the President met and what the President read. Only a few individuals, most notably Henry Kissinger, were able to circumvent Haldeman.

In addition to his duties as an assistant to Nixon the President, Haldeman was also a political agent for Nixon the candidate. Having worked for Richard Nixon in all of his campaigns from 1956 to 1968, Haldeman was part of the inner circle that prepared for the 1972 presidential election. To accomplish his duties Haldeman spent much of his time with the President. Except during a foreign policy crisis, Haldeman was the first and last person to see the President each day. He was usually present for the most important meetings of the President with other White House and executive branch officials and often spent long periods alone with President Nixon, acting as a sounding board for the President's thoughts. This was especially true when the President was at Camp David, Key Biscayne, or San Clemente. Haldeman almost always travelled with the President, but when he was not physically near the President, they kept in close contact by telephone.

Included in the files of H.R. Haldeman are the handwritten notes taken at meetings and during telephone conversations mainly with the President but also with other White House staffers, members of the executive branch, congressmen, senators, and others. These meeting notes were kept religiously, beginning on January 12, 1969, until Haldeman's resignation. Haldeman used his notes to record the President's directives and, in addition, would record in an abbreviated form entire presidential monologues.

One reason these papers are so important is that these notes were kept for Haldeman's use only. He recorded the true intent of President Nixon in blunt language. These notes were then used to produce official memoranda or verbal communications. This documentation probably would not have survived or been opened in this century had the files not been seized by the FBI after Haldeman resigned on April 30, 1973. A second reason these notes are important is that, even though Nixon's tape recordings from the Oval Office, Cabinet Room, and his Executive office Building (EOB) office will someday be opened, many of his conversations will not be found in the tapes or will not be understandable. Tape recording did not actually begin until February 1971. No such recordings were ever made at Camp David, Key Biscayne, San Clemente, Air Force One, or in any other rooms at the White House or the EOB. When recordings did take place, the quality is often very poor. Anyone who has listened to the Watergate tapes, which are open, will know how difficult it is to understand what is being discussed. The clinking of coffee cups, the shuffling of papers, people speaking at the same time, and people speaking away from the microphones make using the tapes a difficult and sometimes fruitless endeavor.

The subject matter recorded in Haldeman's handwritten notes covers a wide range, from Watergate and the Vietnam War to what clothes to wear at a social function or what wine to serve for a state dinner. Fortunately, important subjects such as the ITT affair, the Pentagon Papers, and the 1972 presidential campaign were recorded in much more detail and length than minor administrative or social topics. A researcher interested in any issue of the Nixon administration between January 1969 and May 1973 will find important information in Haldeman's notes; in addition, a researcher studying the inner workings of a modern president will find a rich running account of the day-to-day activities, concerns, and methods of one of the most controversial of contemporary presidents.

In order to use the Haldeman notes effectively, researchers must familiarize themselves with the individuals and dates referred to in the notes. The notes themselves are arranged chronologically. UPA has facilitated the process of following this record of the President's thoughts and directives by producing this guide to the Haldeman notes. The guide provides the date, time, participants, location, and major topics of each meeting or telephone conversation. In addition, this printed guide contains a subject and participant index. To ensure the accuracy of the date, time, participants, and location, UPA has crosschecked this information against the President's Daily Diary, which is the official record of the President's activities, and H.R. Haldeman's Appointment Diary and Phone Calls log.

The following are Haldeman's notes for four separate meetings and phone calls, exemplifying the importance and the challenges presented by them. Brackets indicate either the author's explanation or spelled-out abbreviations.

The first excerpt is from a meeting between President Nixon and Haldeman in the Oval Office on July 1, 1971, at 8:45 AM, in which Nixon reviews the administration's handling of the release and printing of the Pentagon Papers, and leaks in general:

In this meeting, Nixon, realizing that the Pentagon Papers case is a lost cause, fears what may happen if the administration prosecutes Daniel Ellsberg. The previous day, the Supreme Court ruled 6 to 3 against the administration's effort to prevent publication of the Pentagon Papers by the New York Times. However, the leaking of the Pentagon Papers did not seriously affect Nixon, since they covered the development of policy toward Vietnam during the Kennedy and Johnson administrations. Nixon's and Kissinger's real fear was that Ellsberg, who had worked under Kissinger during the transition period in 1968 and 1969, and had participated in the early development of the administration's policy toward Vietnam, would leak classified documents generated during the Nixon years. Neither Tom Huston nor John Whitaker were assigned the duty to head a unit to prevent leaks; instead John Ehrlichman appointed Egil "Bud" Krogh from the Domestic Council. This unit included David Young, Howard Hunt, and G. Gordon Liddy, and became known as the "Plumbers." The Plumbers went on to illegally break into psychiatrist Dr. Lewis Fielding's office in search of damaging information on his patient, Daniel Ellsberg. Nixon does see an opportunity to attack the Democratic party by leaking or declassifying potentially damaging documentation from the Kennedy and Johnson administrations, such as that on the U.S. involvement in the Diem assassination, the Bay of Pigs, and Johnson's 1968 bombing halt on the eve of the election.

These notes bring out two recurring themes of Richard Nixon's: the Alger Hiss case and the bureaucracy. Richard Nixon's investigation of Alger Hiss brought Nixon to the public's attention, a visibility that helped him win the vice presidential nomination in 1952. Nixon distrusted the federal bureaucracy. He believed that civil servants tended to be politically liberal and hold a Democratic bias; also he blamed them for sabotaging his programs and reforms. These beliefs would culminate in Nixon's plan to reorganize the executive branch after the 1972 election, a plan that would have greatly reduced the bureaucracy's role in the implementation of White House policy. The Watergate scandal prevented the plan from ever being carried out.

The second example is a telephone conversation between President Nixon at his office in the EOB and H.R. Haldeman on January 1, 1972, beginning at 1:42 PM.

K [This telephone conversation refers to an earlier conversation between the President and Henry Kissinger.]

P. [President Nixon] thks [thinks] he's under pressure on VN [Vietnam]

- wants to give allout speech prior to Cong [Congress'] return [from Christmas recess]
- K [Kissinger] thks this a mistake—will focus Cong. [Congress on the peace issue]
- don't need to worry about their resolutions K thks shld [should] do VN [Vietnam speech] latest possible ie 25th [of January]—he'd like this best anncmt [announcement of U.S. troop withdrawal]

date is immaterial to K the important thing is review of after etc.—peace plan

Consider separating the two

- [Nixon] has told K everyday re trouble he's in in VN K feels he's in good shape on VN
- if [Nixon] gives a big speech on VN before Cong [comes] back then he makes VN the key issue at outset

[Kissinger] Concerned because P's looking for a way to bugout [of Vietnam] thks that would be a disaster instinct is NVN [North Vietnamese] are ready to give so we'd be totally wrong to show nervousness

if do peace plan early will spur opponents to tear it to pieces need to do it as late as poss. [possible] but before they have another rallying pt. [point]

To put this conversation into context, one must remember that Nixon had, in December 1971, ordered a massive bombing campaign of North Vietnam in order to disrupt an expected spring offensive. The bombing brought on a storm of protests by peace activists, the media, and Congress. During 1971 Congress had voted down numerous resolutions to end the war; however, each vote had brought the resolution closer to passage. Nixon, in addition to being preoccupied by the military and negotiating problems of the war, was concerned with its political impact during an election year. This conversation reveals a new side of Nixon the commander-in-chief, who is being reassured by Kissinger not to buckle under the pressure. In fact, Nixon did make an announcement on January 13, 1972, concerning the withdrawal of additional U.S. troops from Vietnam, and waited until January 25 to make his televised address to the nation, "Making Public a Plan for Peace in Vietnam."

The third example is a meeting attended by the President, John Ehrlichman, and H.R. Haldeman at the Birch Lodge, Camp David, on June 9, 1972, beginning at 11:05 AM.

Birch [Lodge]—E [John Elrlichman]—beautiful day fire in fireplace

- re Higher Ed [Education bill] probly have to sign—+ blast busing hard need to estab. [establish] plan for busing

- re Vets [Veterans] bills make a deal w/ [with] Teague [Congressman Olin E. Teague]

re Dep. [Deputy] AG [Attorney General] consider Lynn [James Lynn] must rule out Ruck cause of environment altho [although?] wld [would] be good at Justice explain to Kldst [Richard Kleindienst] P. not directly involved in apptg [appointing] Dep.

our Cong'l [Congressional] tactic must be to screw things up

why did margin shrink in 68 [regarding Nixon's drop in polls during the 1968 campaign against Hubert Humphrey]

- 1. maybe running around country making speeches isn't right—the momentum Theory
- 2. they [the Democrats] had big event—bombing halt [of North Vietnam]
- 3. we got shafted by the press—main reason our campaign made no diff. [difference] cause it wasn't reported.

The meetings at Camp David were normally used for longterm planning. This meeting, which begins with a brief roundup of pending legislation and the consideration of possible appointees, lays out Nixon's basic public relations strategy against George McGovern. This strategy of smearing his opponent as a radical liberal harkens back to Nixon's 1946 campaign against Jerry Voorhis for the U.S. House of Representatives, and against Helen Gahagan Douglas in 1950 for the U.S. Senate. The notes end with Nixon's favorite complaint about the anti-Nixon Bias of the press. Here the President blames the media for the narrowness of his 1968 election victory.

The last example consists of the notes of a telephone conversation between President Nixon at Camp David and H.R. Haldeman on July 21, 1972, at 3:30 PM.

other side has serious prob [problem; this relates to the disclosure that Democratic vice presidential nominee Senator Thomas Eagleton had a psychological breakdown and had received shock therapy]

we had not antic dropping him [Eagleton] in lite of poll makes move 1) unpopular + 2) weak not stay [staying] by yr [your] man etc. mixed bag for us he [McGovern] cld [could] be hurt by dropping him so keeping him on not nec [necessarily] to our adv [advantage] that there was more sympathy than edit [editorials] wld [would] indicate his strong pub [public] support cld give him more leverage

we shld [should] consid [consider] on Mon. the p. c. [press conference]

if throw him off—then no p. c. if stays on—go ahead

P. wld keep him on—unless can get K. [Kennedy] to avoid campaign bogged down for 2-3 wks [weeks] not because of merits natural desire of press to help wld swing behind him also prob. of replacing him + delay campaign so—adds up to keeping him on.

This appraisal by Richard Nixon of the Thomas Eagleton affair is both politically sophisticated as well as probably correct. This should not be surprising, as Nixon was and still is one of America's top political experts. George McGovern's actions—initially supporting Eagleton "1,000%" and then forcing Eagleton to leave the ticket on July 31 by leaking to the press that he would be dropped—produced the very results that Nixon had predicted. The selection of Sargent Shriver as his vice-presidential running mate brought McGovern little help in his ill-fated campaign. Shriver, though married to a Kennedy, had no personal constituency and had never held an elective office. For McGovern's campaign, which had always seemed doomed to defeat, the Eagleton crisis was one more disaster.

The conversation reported above also reveals another recurring Nixon theme: the Kennedy family. Nixon still respected the voter appeal of the Kennedy name, even though Edward Kennedy's involvement with Chappaquiddick was still fresh in the public's mind.

There have been many accounts of the Nixon presidency by former insiders as well as by H.R. Haldeman and Nixon himself, but one always suspects the motives and veracity of these reminiscences. There are, in addition, millions of pages of official documentation from the Nixon White House which are now being opened that are extremely useful in the study of the Nixon administration. The documentation suffers from the official's knowledge that what is being put down on paper will become part of the permanent record, which usually means that the writer is guarded both in what is stated and how it is stated. Haldeman's notes, which were not supposed to be part of the official record, give researchers an extremely rare opportunity to sit in on the most private of presidential discussions. These papers are both important and fascinating because they provide a firsthand, spontaneous account of one of the most controversial of U.S. presidents.

USER INSTRUCTIONS

The instructions below describe the scope and organization of the collection, the accession numbering system used, and information elements and suggested uses of the Bibliography of Documents and Index by Subjects and Names.

SCOPE AND ORGANIZATION OF THE COLLECTION

University Publications of America (UPA) has begun a major microform publication series of the textual records that are being opened by the Nixon Presidential Materials Projects, National Archives and Records Administration, titled Papers of the Nixon White House and edited by Professor Joan Hoff-Wilson. To date UPA has completed nine parts of the series:

- Part 1. Official Inventories of Papers and Other Historical Materials of the Nixon White House.
- Part 2. The President's Meeting File, 1969-1974.
- Part 3. John Ehrlichman: Notes of Meetings with the President, 1969-1973.
- Part 4. The John Ehrlichman Alphabetical Subject File, 1969–1973.
- Part 5. H. R. Haldeman: Notes of White House Meetings, 1969-1973.
- Part 6. Series A. President's Office Files, Documents Annotated by the President, 1969-1974.
- Part 6. Series B. President's Office Files. Daily News Summaries Annotated by the President, 1969–1973.
- Part 7. President's Personal Files, 1969-1974.

Part 8. The Nixon White House Tapes: The Complete Transcripts Prepared by the Watergate Special Prosecution Force.

The meeting notes which comprise Part 5 of this series are part of the White House Special Files, Papers of H. R. Haldeman. The White House during the Nixon administration kept two parallel filing systems: the Central File and Special File. The Special File was established to maintain especially sensitive materials and was administered by politically loyal White House staffers. The Central File which is the normal filing system for the White House is run by professional civil service personnel. All of H. R. Haldeman's files were kept either in Mr. Haldeman's office or the Special File.

The Annotated News Summaries series of the President's Office Files renamed the Daily News Summaries Annotated by the President, 1969–1973 has been reproduced for this publication. The documents are arranged chronologically. Researchers should refer to the Index by Subjects and Names portion of this printed publication to locate documents on a particular subject.

UPA has microfilmed this entire series.

ACCESSION NUMBERS

Each separately dated document has been assigned a single accession number for reference purposes in the Bibliography and Index sections and is keyed directly to the location of the document within the companion microfiche collection. The first element of the accession number indicates that the document may be located in Part 5 of the series entitled Papers of the Nixon White House, the middle element identifies the number of the first microfiche card on which the document may be found, and the third element pinpoints the exact frame (01–96) on the microfiche where the document begins.

The first and second elements of the accession number are eye visible on each microfiche card; the third element (frame number) may be viewed on the lower left side of the frame itself. These elements are illustrated in the sample provided below.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF DOCUMENTS

All items in the microfiche collection are described individually in the Bibliography of Documents.

Bibliographic Data

Bibliographic data given for each main entry include the following items:

• Date—The date provided is the date of the meeting; all meeting dates have been verified in the President's Daily Diary and have been corrected where discrepancies were noted. Where there is no date on a meeting note or where a date could not be ascertained from the Daily Diary we have attempted to supply an approximate date in brackets, where we could not supply a date [n.d.] has been entered.

• Time—The time provided is generally the range of time from the beginning to the ending of the meeting, however for some meetings, the beginning time is all that could be supplied. Occasionally it was not possible to determine any time at all.

Participants

Brief descriptions have been prepared for each item in the collection. Descriptions indicate whether the notes are from a meeting or telephone conversation, and the names of participants. Where the format of the conversation upon which the notes are based was ambiguous, as was especially the case with the early notes, the description is followed by (?).

Names of all participants except the President and H. R. Haldeman may be located in the Index by Subjects and Names.

Descriptors

The descriptors listing serves to characterize the subjects of the meeting. Also because they correspond to the subject and name terms under which the meeting will be found in the Index by Subjects and Names, the descriptors can be used as references for finding additional items of similar subject matter.

The descriptors section lists all subjects, organizations, and persons discussed in significant detail during a particular meeting.

INDEX BY SUBJECTS AND NAMES

The Index by Subjects and Names provides access by (1) major subject matter; (2) names of persons or organizations participating or discussed.

Entries in this index consist of the following structural elements:

- terms;
- meeting date;
- accession number assigned to each indexed document and used to identify the document in the Bibliography of Documents and the microfiche collection;
- cross references (see and see also).

Subject Terms and Cross-References

Subject terms and cross-references used in the Index by Subjects and Names are based upon an extensively cross-referenced hierarchical indexing vocabulary developed specifically to handle the Nixon White House materials.

When indexing a document to which a hierarchy of these terms might apply, we select the most specific applicable term or terms, and usually do not also index to the broader or narrower referencing terms that, while relevant, do not reflect as well the specific topic of discussion. For example, a document focusing specifically on "School busing" would not also be indexed to the more general term "Discrimination in education." It is important, therefore, to pursue relevant see also references under a term, as these generally list additional documents not identified under the broader term. See references direct the user from terminology that has not been used in our controlled vocabulary thesaurus to the specific form of the subject term we have used.

Alphabetization and Sorting of References

Index terms are alphabetized on a word-by-word and letterby-letter basis, observing spaces but ignoring punctuation. Thus, "Water pollution" precedes "Watergate affair." Therefore, it is important to know where there are word breaks in a term.

WITHDRAWALS

There have been extensive withdrawals from the Nixon papers. Documents have been withdrawn by both the National Archives and Records Administration and by representatives of former President Richard M. Nixon. "Document Withdrawal Records" have been inserted at the beginning of each affected folder enumerating all withdrawn materials. Items withdrawn by the National Archives are identified by an arabic number, and those withdrawn by Nixon's representatives are identified by an arabic number preceded by a capital N. Additionally, pages showing the original locations of the withdrawn materials have been inserted within the folders.

Withdrawal records list the document type, subject/title or correspondents, date, and restriction code. Each withdrawal has been assigned one of the following restriction codes:

- A. Release would violate a Federal statute
- B. Document contains national security classified information
- C. Release would violate an individual's rights
- D. Release would disclose trade secrets or confidential commercial or financial information
- E. Release would disclose investigatory information compiled for law enforcement purposes
- F. Document containing private and personal material has been withdrawn and returned
- G. Document containing non-historical material has been withdrawn and returned

Both "Document Withdrawal Records" and pages showing withdrawal locations have been microfilmed in the UPA collection and are noted in the companion finding aid. A separate entry has been created for each withdrawal record and individual items that have been withdrawn are identified in the Bibliography of Documents.

The withdrawn materials are under review by the National Archives and Records Administration and as withdrawn materials are released UPA will issue supplements to the microfiche collection and will update the bibliography and indexes to reflect the additional material.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

UPA would like to thank the staff of the Nixon Presidential Materials Project, National Archives and Records Administration for their cooperation on this publication. The staff is both knowledgeable about the Nixon papers in their care, and articulate and forthcoming with that knowledge.
