SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Records of the U.S. Information Agency, Part 3: Cold War Era Research Reports, Series A: 1960–1963 brings together a large number of reports that USIA prepared on topics relevant to the cold war, U.S. foreign policy and international relations, and American politics and culture. The purpose of these reports was to inform the president, secretary of state, and other foreign policy leaders on international events and foreign public opinion of the United States.

Prominent personalities featured in the collection include Presidents Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy, and Lyndon B. Johnson; world leaders Nikita S. Khrushchev, Harold Macmillan, Julius Nyerere, Charles de Gaulle, Konrad Adenauer, Mao Tse-tung, Chou En-lai, Fidel Castro, Josip Broz Tito, Ahmed Ben Bella, Wladyslaw Gomulka, Urho Kekkonen, Gamal Abdel Nasser, Jawaharlal Nehru, Kwame Nkrumah, Sylvanus Olympio, Pope John XXIII, Anastas Mikoyan, Haile Selassie, and U Thant; current or historical figures including Abraham Lincoln, Che Guevara, Lee Harvey Oswald, Elijah Muhammad, Eleanor Roosevelt, Bertrand Russell, Booker T. Washington, Winston Churchill, Thomas Jefferson, and Vladimir I. Lenin; and astronauts Yuri Gagarin, Alan Shepard, Gherman Titov, and Gordon Cooper.

The collection consists primarily of a number of recurring document types. These documents fall into three main categories, described below: reviews of print and broadcast media in Communist, “free world,” and developing areas; analyses of Communist propaganda activities; and world reactions to major events and speeches. In addition, the collection contains many special analyses that appear just once. Significant topics discussed in these reports are also described below, following descriptions of the recurring document types.

Mass Media

The collection includes a series of “Communications Fact Books” on a large number of countries. Each fact book includes an introductory section with information on the nation’s demographic characteristics, including population, minority groups, education and literacy, religions, and government social and information policies. Following this section is a detailed discussion of the country’s communications media, including newspapers, periodicals, radio, television, books, libraries, and motion pictures. These reports also include discussions of a country’s informal means of communication, such as social events, traveling workers, and students’ reports.

Especially interesting are the discussions of informal channels of communication in Africa: “There is a widespread custom for literate Africans to read newspapers to illiterate groups. Discussions at local advisory councils and at social talk-fests or barazas, as well as the news carried by schoolchildren and travelers (especially small tradesmen) are all important factors in the communication process” (Reel 5, Frame 0556). The communications fact book on Somalia (Reel 14, Frame 0695) contains an interesting discussion of informal communication within the country: “It is the Somali poet who is perhaps most effective in directing and molding public opinion through informal means. Somali poetry is widely popular and is important in public life. It is used as an instrument of publicity in modern party politics and in the traditional pastoral environment. Often a single poem will cover vast distances quickly via messengers and travelers.” One is left wondering whether Somalia is or was the only country where poetry occupies such an important place.

Another country that seems to have changed dramatically since the Eisenhower-Kennedy years is Colombia. The fact book paints a surprisingly calm, stable portrait of the country during the late 1950s. Although it notes that leaders are concerned with a growing sense of peasant discontent in the rural areas, the authors describe a stable, relatively democratic society with strong cultural and government institutions, an informed citizenry, and a highly respected national press. There is no mention of narcotics production, violence, or guerrilla organizations (Reel 2, Frame 0959).

The fact book for Mauritania shows that the science of document preservation has come a long way: “Nomadic tribes for hundreds of years have moved their camel-borne collections of valuable Arabic manuscripts with them from one camping site to the next. Of historical interest today, the estimated 2,000 manuscripts include commentaries on the Koran, legal books, histories of tribes and towns, works on mysticism and philosophy, medical books, biographies of local leaders, poetry, and travel books.... Efforts are currently being made to locate and photocopy the surviving collections” (Reel 5, Frame 0589).

Other important document series include reviews and assessments of countries’ press; television sets, broadcast activity, program content, watching, and opinions; radio listening in selected areas, with a primary focus on listening to and views on Voice of America (VOA) broadcasts, often compared to the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) and Communist broadcasts; motion pictures production, viewing, and preferences for domestic or foreign films, as well as a country’s performance at international film festivals; bookselling, book production, and imports; and country experiences in a VOA contest in which transistor radios were awarded to selected participants in a VOA survey of listening behavior.

Communist Propaganda Activities

In one of the most significant recurring sets of collection documents, USIA authors examine Soviet Bloc and Communist China propaganda activities in world areas. Separate reports are issued for Western Europe, South Asia, the Far East, Africa, Latin America, Arab States and Israel, and the Middle East and Aegean area. The reports typically cover propaganda efforts in pamphlets and books, periodicals, tabloids, radio broadcasts, election campaigns, Communist front organizations, exhibitions, foreign aid programs, East-West trade, and official visits.

Other recurring documents cover Communist Bloc international broadcasting activities; propaganda activities within the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (USSR), Eastern European countries, Cuba, and the People’s Republic of China; attitudes and aspirations of foreign students, usually from developing countries, in the Soviet Union and other Bloc countries; and an extremely interesting series of reports titled Notes from the Communist “Ideological Front.” In this last set of documents, USIA authors comb through the mass media in Communist states to find significant, provocative, and sometimes humorous examples of the efforts of party officials to implement Communist policies and doctrine in their countries.

One author describes Romania’s attempt to rid Romanian poetry of its corrupt features: “The kinds of innovation that are required of poets in Rumania are not those which stem from the creative sources of the poet, but rather innovations that arise from socialist realism. People’s poetry is packed with socialist realism and since this is what the ruling regime has ordered, Rumanian poets have been warned about their ‘cheap and puerile philosophizing’ and ‘their veritable mania of exultation with respect to life,’ because this ‘continuous state of jubilation indicates a superficiality in poetry’” (Reel 15, Frame 0644).

World Reactions to Major Events

One of the principal duties of USIA was tracking world opinion on major events, especially those that had a significant bearing on the cold war competition and conflicts between Western nations and the Sino-Soviet Bloc. The years 1960–1963 offered no shortage of developments for analysts to study. The fear of nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union focused world attention on nuclear weapons testing and the efforts of the two superpowers to agree to a test ban. Collection authors closely track world opinion on these developments, and particularly interesting documents show the concern and often the outrage of the world’s press upon the Soviet Union’s 1961 resumption of atmospheric tests (Reel 5, Frame 0012), followed by U.S. resumption in 1962 (Reel 6, Frame 0332). When the test ban agreement was announced, relief was everywhere apparent; yet one author noted that although Western Europe praised the agreement, the continent worried that the Soviet Union would demand a U.S.-USSR nonaggression pact that would leave Europe out. The author describes this as “the specter of a new Yalta between the United States and the USSR” (Reel 13, Frame 0592).

Other documents present world reactions to the China-India border conflict; the brewing Sino-Soviet dispute over Communist doctrine and tactics; the Vietnam conflict, including the growing U.S. involvement; USSR and U.S. space flights; racial discrimination incidents in the U.S. South; French President Charles de Gaulle’s sabotage of the United Kingdom’s effort to join the European Economic Community (Common Market); overall European economic and political integration; a proposed NATO multilateral nuclear force; and the November 1963 assassination of President Kennedy, as well as President Johnson's efforts to assure the United States and the world of a continuation of Kennedy's policies. Finally, a number of authors survey public opinion in different world areas on the cold war itself: whether the East or West is winning it or will win it, as well as how the two superpowers measure up militarily, economically, politically, or in other dimensions.

Judging by the sheer number and frequency of USIA reports alone, the most significant event during the 1960–1963 period was the Cuban Missile Crisis. Beginning on October 23, 1962, the morning after President Kennedy's dinnertime address to the nation, USIA issued twice-daily summaries of world reaction to the latest developments in the standoff. When the news came that Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev had announced that the Soviet Union would dismantle the missile bases in Cuba, the entire world seemed to let out its first collective sigh of relief that a possible World War III had been averted, and even that the dynamics of the cold war had fundamentally changed. West Germany's newspaper Die Welt expressed a common view: "It was high time that the Soviet advances ran up against hard resistance in the West, for only in this way can the big catastrophe...be avoided" (Reel 9, Frame 0412).

The next morning's summary report noted that while welcoming Khrushchev's capitulation to President Kennedy's demands, many media editorialists wondered whether the Soviet leader was sincere, and whether he might not have another trick up his sleeve. He apparently did not, and the great majority of the non-Communist world expressed the opinion that Kennedy had achieved a monumental victory through his combination of courage and diplomacy. On the other hand, most countries also expressed the view that Khrushchev had played the role of "peacemaker" by agreeing not to challenge the United States in the Caribbean. The very large set of USIA documents on the missile crisis forms one of the most vitally interesting sets of material in the entire collection. The researcher can follow the diplomatic and military developments along with the entire world during this supremely dangerous and exciting time.

A final set of recurring, mostly monthly documents—one of great interest to researchers—presents the texts of John F. Kennedy's speeches, both major and minor. On the one hand, there are speeches such as the complete text of Kennedy's address to the nation on October 22, 1962, announcing the quarantine on Soviet arms shipments to Cuba and the onset of the Cuban Missile Crisis (Reel 9, Frame 0679), as well as the president's famous June 26, 1963, speech in Berlin, in which he declared, "Ich bin ein Berliner" (Reel 13, Frame 0337). On the other, the president delivered hundreds of less monumental, but nonetheless interesting and important, remarks on subjects including economic policy, taxation, foreign relations, foreign aid, the cold war, nuclear war, the nuclear test ban agreement, disarmament, missiles, armed services and national defense, the Berlin Crisis, foreign trade and economic relations, freedom of the press, libraries, handicapped children, elderly Americans, civil rights, racial discrimination, women, youth, employment, the Vietnam conflict, space programs, natural resources conservation, arts and the humanities, teachers, immigration, the Peace Corps, Latin America, East-West trade, cultural relations with other countries, political broadcasting, civil-military relations, and education. In an October 1963 news conference, the president gave what would prove to be a profoundly wrong prediction on Vietnam, entitled "Gradual U.S. Troop Reduction": "We would expect to withdraw a thousand men from South Vietnam by the end of the year" (Reel 15, Frame 0432).

Special Analyses

The collection includes a large number of special reports in which USIA authors discuss specific subjects of unusual interest to cold war policy makers. These include analyses of Communist sociology and sociologists, Communist jamming of VOA broadcasts, the morale of Eastern European professionals, Bulgaria's campaign against Western cultural influences, the twenty-year plan of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, Japan's improving image in Southeast Asia, and Sylvanus Olympio's visit with President Kennedy shortly before the military coup in Togo and Olympio's assassination.

Several documents quote Mao Tse-tung's views on revolution and discuss how markedly they differ from Soviet views. The author of one report surveys refugees' reasons for escaping from Soviet Eastern Europe satellite countries. One refugee, eighty-three years old, seemed to speak for many when he remarked, "The petty frustrations of living in a Communist state are unbearable" (Reel 9, Frame 0068). Other authors examine labor conditions in the Soviet Union, the breakdown of the judicial system under the Castro regime in Cuba, Fidel Castro's praise for Soviet youth and criticism of U.S. Peace Corps workers, Chinese Communist satires of U.S. politics, the songs of nineteenth-century U.S. composer Stephen Foster, and Czechoslovakia's acceptance of the U.S. dance "The Twist": "In the form in which it is performed in this country, it can no longer be described as the dance of ill-bred Western bourgeois youth. It has become our own social dance; it reflects the spirit, views, and temperament of our young progressive people who are building communism" (Reel 11, Frame 0964).

In a highly interesting document (Reel 5, Frame 0740), a USIA author examines the perceptions and misperceptions of Soviet citizens on life in the United States. Commenting on views expressed by Soviet visitors to an American trade exhibit, the author notes: "They often received with skepticism information which tended to illustrate the real breadth of the disparity between Soviet and American living standards. That American wages are four times as great as Soviet wages while consumer goods prices are roughly equivalent was difficult for many visitors to comprehend.... As one visitor in Volgograd reported, 'The people come back to the factory after visiting your exhibit and discuss it among themselves. They just don't believe that American wages are so high.'" Finally, in a report on inefficiency and waste in Soviet heavy industry, the author describes how Soviet authorities decided to build a naval shipyard in the Carpathian mountains, despite obvious questions: "Some years ago, the Central Cutter Construction Bureau decided to build a shipyard near Uzhgorod in the Carpathian Mountains.... Local economists raised serious objections to the plan, stating that the area was unsuitable for such an enterprise: (1) no lumber needed for cutters was available locally; (2) there were no nearby plants producing motors and electrical equipment; and (3) most important, there were no rivers or lakes in the area for testing the boats. All objections were overruled" (Reel 9, Reel 0196).

The last speech that President Kennedy prepared to give went undelivered: it was meant for his scheduled major address in Dallas, Texas, on November 22, 1963, the day of his assassination. The text of this speech offers probably the most comprehensive review of Kennedy's administration. Entitled "A Review of U.S. Strengths," it gives an impassioned assessment and defense of American military, economic, cultural, political, and moral power. It shows that Kennedy was proud of what his administration had accomplished, as well as buoyantly hopeful for the future. The collection ends with this and the other speeches that the president gave, or intended to give, in Dallas, on what were to be the final few days of his life.

On the early evening of October 22, 1962, President Kennedy began an address to the nation: "This government, as promised, has maintained the closest surveillance of the Soviet military build-up on the island of Cuba. Within the past week, unmistakable evidence has established the fact that a series of offensive missile sites is now in preparation on that imprisoned island. The purpose of these bases can be none other than to provide a nuclear strike capability against the Western Hemisphere." Thus began the unforgettable days of uncertainty, fear, courage, and diplomatic dueling that we now call the Cuban Missile Crisis.

The text of this address is contained in Reel 9, Frames 0679 through 0685 of the UPA document collection Records of the U.S. Information Agency, Part 3: Cold War Era Special Reports, Series A: 1960–1963. This collection contains a large number of reports that USIA prepared on topics relevant to the Cold War, U.S. foreign policy and international relations, and American politics and culture. The reports cover the last year of the Eisenhower Administration, the entire Kennedy Administration, and the first five weeks of the Johnson Administration. The purpose of these reports was to inform the president, secretary of state, and other foreign policy leaders on international events and foreign public opinion of the United States.

The collection includes reviews of print and broadcast media in communist, Free World, and developing areas; descriptions and assessments of communist propaganda activities; and analyses of world reactions to major events and presidential speeches. The reports cover the great issues of the day, such as the dispute between the Chinese People's Republic and the Soviet Union, the China-India border conflict, the Cuban Missile Crisis, the resumption of atmospheric nuclear weapons testing by the Soviet Union and later by the United States, the nuclear test ban agreement, attempts at European political and economic integration, the unsuccessful effort of the United Kingdom to join the European Economic Community (Common Market), the emergence of newly independent states in Africa, racial discrimination in the United States, the developing conflicts in Indochina, U.S. and Soviet space flights, and the November 1963 assassination of President Kennedy, as well as President Johnson's initial policies. In addition, the collection includes amply-exemplified assessments of the efforts of individual communist regimes to indoctrinate their peoples and implement their policies, as well as a large compilation of President Kennedy's speeches, both major and minor—although nearly every speech Kennedy gave has the tone of a major address. The compilation of Kennedy's speeches alone makes this collection a uniquely valuable resource for researchers.
