INTRODUCTION

During the period of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, the Office of Indian Affairs was criticized and bureaucratized but only partially reformed. In several chapters of the two-volume work on Indian affairs, The Great Father,¹ Francis Paul Prucha details the “Indian Service” and its responsibility, as seen by itself and others. The titles of Prucha’s chapters, not only on the Indian Service but on other aspects of Indian-government relations and nongovernmental interest groups, reflect three of the basic nongeographic, nontribal themes of Native American history: the continuing need and demand for “reform,” the Indian services, and the interrelationship of law and guardianship.

Prucha’s work remains the single most indispensable guide and reference to Indian affairs and U.S. government relations of recent writing, for the novice and the disciplined researcher alike. Yet the three themes comport with the vast majority of the documents included in University Publications of America’s (UPA) microfilm collection titled The Native Americans Reference Collection: Documents Collected by the Office of Indian Affairs, originally collected as “Miscellaneous Documents Relating to Indian Affairs” (hereafter Miscellaneous documents), kept by the Financial Division of the Office of Indian Affairs. The themes and attendant issues can be researched and analyzed in the host of material contained in the Miscellaneous documents microfilmed by UPA.

The compilation of Miscellaneous documents comprises 138 volumes. The pagination scheme of the volumes is continuous, although a number of the volumes retain the original published scheme and do not fit within the scheme begun by the Office of Indian Affairs. Those retaining their own pagination are primarily single-volume printings of government publications, running to several hundred pages in one or two volumes.

Were one only beginning to study Native American issues as a novice or an undergraduate, the review of a fraction of the holdings in the Miscellaneous documents would undoubtedly be impressive. For the avid researcher, specialist, or self-styled expert, the search is indeed fraught with continuing diversity and exceptional insight.

In 1927 when Lawrence F. Schmeckebier wrote “the history of the Office of Indian Affairs is practically the history of Indian policy of the United States,”² the unstated assumption both then and later was that the Indian Office also was forming that policy. That unstated assumption formed possibly a good part of the psychology of Indian affairs from the Dawes Act of 1887 to the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. It may indeed have been predominant.

Perhaps the idea of the Indian Office as the paramount protagonist of Indian policy may be questioned when one realizes that from the administration of Andrew Johnson to Theodore Roosevelt's election in 1904, fifteen different individuals served as commissioner of Indian Affairs. None of these is particularly remembered in the annals of Indian policy with any degree of personal or political influence.³ While these commissioners acted as the administrators of Indian affairs over a forty-year period, coinciding with the loss of treaty-making power by the executive, to the period of allotting lands to individual Indians, it may be fair to say that Congress and reform groups established a good deal of the impetus of Indian policy as professed, if not practiced, by the federal government.

In the forty years following Theodore Roosevelt's election until the death of his distant cousin, Franklin Roosevelt, there were six commissioners of Indian Affairs, each of whom attempted to leave an imprint, if not an imprimatur, on the conduct of federal-Indian relations. From Francis Leupp to John Collier, the commissioners were demonstrably more vocal and forthright in their beliefs and their conduct of the affairs of the Indian Office toward not only Indian tribes but also the Congress. The Miscellaneous collection of documents demonstrates how Congress and the executive both moved on different trails from a period of passive activism to at-large initiatives, from the opening of reservations through the appropriation increases in the early twentieth century. This is amply demonstrated in a review of the hearings held before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, many of which were printed prior to the passage of the Bureau of the Budget Act of 1920 and collected in the Miscellaneous documents.

The Miscellaneous documents include items too voluminous to review in their entirety under one theme or purpose. Nevertheless, a review of these documents demonstrates why and to what extent Indian people were perceived as they were from the latter third of the nineteenth century until the years prior to the surfacing of many Indian resource issues in the early twentieth century. Indeed, the Survey of Conditions of Indians in the United States,⁴ undertaken in the 1920s and 1930s at the behest of the U.S. Senate, was generated in part not only to portray conditions under which Native Americans labored and lived but also with the hope of reasserting a certain loyalty and diligence of thought to Indian issues.

This U.S. Senate series of hearings (1928–1943) is a familiar source to Native American history researchers and served as a document base for passage of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. The hearings before the Joint Commission of the Congress to Investigate Indian Affairs are less often cited. This series of twenty investigations, a number of which appear in the Miscellaneous documents in Volumes 102, 103, and 107, were a precursor of the Survey hearings held in the 1920s and 1930s.⁵

The documents found in this microfilm collection depict concern with post-Civil War economic and social conditions of Indian people and the concurrent transmigration of non-Indians to the Great Plains and the Far West. While the archival records of the Office of Indian Affairs indicate the effects of Indian policy, the Miscellaneous documents comprise the official and unofficial commissioner's office correspondence files; these are quite voluminous and eclectic and raise an interesting archival question. Since the Office of Indian Affairs was its own keeper of the government record on Indian issues, a researcher in the age of computer specialization may think that a quantitative assessment of the Miscellaneous documents is required to discern government motives for or against some issues. Such an approach, while laudable, in the final analysis may be judged unnecessary, if not inconclusive.

Does the collection reflect preoccupations of the Indian Office with certain subject matter and themes fundamentally or tangentially different from those of other collections, as authors and political and missionary memoirs have indicated heretofore? If so, what difference does it make in the reading and writing of Native American history?

Traditionally, for some, history is taken to be chronological in nature, expository in intent, neutral about its present, and somewhat, if not completely, moralistic about the past. With that in mind, how does one study and write about land issues, irrigation policy versus water rights, or any material on education of Native Americans, tribal government, or a panoply of present day issues rooted in the policies and realities of the past one and a quarter centuries?

The abundance of information on various subjects cannot, in and of itself, be interpreted as the Indian Office's sympathy with the particular problem or issue described. The lack of such information on important and subsequently decisive issues, however, makes one question to what degree the Indian Office was aware of, much less sympathetic to and actively working on, these latter issues. For example, one may wonder at the lack of information on New Mexico Pueblo issues in the Miscellaneous series.

The General Allotment Act of February 8, 1887, reflected and reinforced the federal policy goal of turning Native American reservation population to farming, and it included a provision for those who chose not to farm. The agriculturalization of reservation lands, however, was by 1887 a reality already pursued through the allotment of Indian land. Allotment opened the way for Indian lands within the reservation boundaries to be utilized on an individual basis, by Indian and non-Indian alike. By the close of Woodrow Wilson's administration, much reservation land was out of Indian—and government—control.

The amount of information, primarily in congressional documentation, on the railroads bidding for right of way through reservations from Oklahoma to Minnesota is extensive. Thus, an economic history of the Great Plains states and the emigration of non-Indian settlers into the areas penetrated by railroads is in the materials contained in this series of records. In addition, these documents provide reprints of actual correspondence found in the records of the Office of Indian Affairs and the Office of the Secretary of the Interior regarding railroad expansion west of the Mississippi.

For some the records of the Indian Office and the commissioner may seem a reflection of policies set forth in Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock (187 U.S. 553). In Lone Wolf, the Supreme Court held the plenary power of Congress over the administration and federal relationship with Indian tribes to be preeminent. The issue from which this critical case derived was allotment in severalty and sale of surplus lands. A critical decision, Lone Wolf was brought on behalf of that individual as well as confederated members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes. The thrust of the argument revolved upon a provision of the 1867 Treaty signed with members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes at Medicine Lodge Creek, Kansas.⁶ That provision required the signed consent of at least three-fourths of the adult male population to any future cession of lands specified in the treaty.

When Congress enacted the Act of June 6, 1900,⁷ which ratified the 1892 Agreement whereby the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache ceded, relinquished, and conveyed certain lands in exchange for allotments without the required three-fourths consent, the issue reached the Supreme Court. Not only did the Court hold that congressional power over Indians existed, citing both recent and earlier decisions, but it also set forth a philosophical and sociological framework on the issue.

Rather than indicate what reciprocity might be implied in the treaty-making process, and the 1867 Treaty in particular, the Lone Wolf Court reiterated the dependency and wardship status of Indian tribes, which the Indians who brought the suit (and by extension all others) “continue to bear towards the government of the United States” (23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221). Indeed for the Native American, this philosophical and legal status was fixed for some time to come. Without devoting further discussion to Lone Wolf, suffice it to say that certain Indian lands specified in the 1892 Agreement were opened to settlement by the General Land Office. The issues raised in Lone Wolf are thoroughly illustrated in the Miscellaneous documents. The Report of the Assistant Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated October 9, 1901, described the process of opening those lands (see Vol. 56, pp. 52394–52408).

One of the early scholarly approaches made to the study of government policy toward Indian relations was that of Annie Heloise Abel. Reprint copies of several articles published in American Historical Association publications from 1906 to 1910 are found in Volume 80 (pp. 70893–71141). They include: “The Indians in the Civil War,”⁸ “Proposals for an Indian State, 1778–1878,”⁹ and “The History of Events Resulting in Indian Consolidation West of the Mississippi.”¹⁰ The latter article includes a bibliographical guide to sources with comments and insights into the extensive public and private papers, along with other sources Abel reviewed, that were available in 1906.

One of the major themes of mid to late twentieth century Native American history, an issue that confronted Indian tribes, was the use of natural resources; this was extensively claimed and litigated in federal judicial forums. Many of these issues are still confronting Indian tribes today, including the utilization or payment for prior use of their natural resources. The philosophical and moral obligations toward the Indian population and the use of public funds for carrying out those obligations are still debated within the context of Indian benefit.

Were one to engage in the writing of an economic perspective on the development of the western states beginning in the post-Civil War era, interesting comparisons might be drawn from the mining camps located on Ute Indian lands in western Colorado (see Sen. Ex. Doc. 29, 46th Cong., 2d sess., in Vol. 4, pp. 3367–3464; and Sen. Ex. Doc. 31, 46th Cong., 3d sess., in Vol. 7, pp. 5066–5119) and the mining that occurred in areas controlled by Sioux in western Dakota and eastern Wyoming (see reports of the Sioux commissions that spoke with the Sioux in 1875, 1876, and 1877 in efforts to obtain the Black Hills; the 1875 report is contained in Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 1875, p. 1B4, at Vol. 2, pp. 1518–1536, MDIA; Sen. Ex. Doc. 9, 44th Cong., 2d sess., Dec. 1876, Vol. 1, pp. 692–780).

Similarly, the desire of non-Indians to obtain Chippewa lands in Wisconsin precipitated issues regarding natural resources in the 1880s still being litigated one hundred years later (see Sen. Rep. 2710, 50th Cong., 2d sess.; Vol. 26 comprises 1,300 pages, with a ninety-page introduction and a fourteen-page synoptical index to documents contained in the Senate report). The Senate report explored the process of allotting lands at Lac Courte d’Oreilles, Lac de Flambeau, Bad River, Pond du Lac, and other reservations in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

How might one use the variety of subject matter, such as that contained in Volume 7 or 72, given the seemingly unconnected and unrelated nature of the subjects covered in these and other volumes? A point of commonality is chronology. For those with an eye to the common themes and whole picture, the seemingly unrelated may take on a new perspective by distinguishing the relationships among various subjects.

From Hiawatha or “Nanabozho” the Odibwa Indian Play, reproduced by students of the U.S. Indian School, Chilocco, Oklahoma, 1907 (Vol. 7, pp. 63764–63777) to A Souvenir Book of Photographic Views of the Chilocco Indian Training School, April 1906 (pp. 64759–64806) are a myriad of reports, including a 1904 statement on behalf of Oklahoma statehood (pp. 64081–64473) made before the House Committee on Territories, January 20, 1904. Included also is a monograph on Nature Study and Gardening (1905) to be used by teachers in Indian schools.

Volume 7 also includes an 1886 item, essentially a brief prepared for the secretary of the interior on behalf of the right-of-way application of the Missouri, Kansas, and Texas Railway through Indian Territory. Lands in Oklahoma were a continuing source of legal, if not physical, contention, as were public lands throughout the West. The “Regulations concerning Permission to Use Right of Way over the Public Lands, Forest and other Reservations...and the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks” (pp. 64547–64554), citing three acts of Congress as authority, illustrate this aspect of natural resource use.

For those interested in Alaska, see Vol. 6 (pp. 4026–4073); Sen. Ex. Doc. 132, 46th Cong., 2d sess.; and Sen. Ex. Doc. 105, 46th Cong., 2d sess. (pp. 4074–4107). One of the early documents summarizing education in Alaska was printed in 1881 as Sen. Ex. Doc. 30, 47th Cong., 1st sess. (Vol. 7, pp. 5211–5238). Included were population data for settlements and villages as of 1880, with designation as white, Creole, Aleuts, and Inuits, by location and district. Similarly, Sen. Ex. Doc. 71, 47th Cong., 1st sess., reprinted “Reports of Captain L. A. Beardslee, U.S. Navy, relative to Affairs in Alaska,” and the operation of the U.S.S. Jamestown (pp. 5707–5893). Another item on Alaska praised the missionaries fighting the “ravages of drink and disease” in 1914 at Fort Yukon and the Yukon River Valley (Vol. 104, pp. 90928–90934). A copy of Sen. Ex. Doc. 125, 49th Cong., 2d sess., the “Report of an Expedition to the Copper, Tanana, and Koyukuk Rivers, in the Territory of Alaska in the year 1885,” is found in Volume 17 at page 13373.

One of the more interesting documents to be found in the collection with regard to allotments prior to the 1887 General Allotment Act is House Misc. Doc. No. 18, 47th Cong., 2d sess., 1883. This item (Vol. 7, pp. 5539–5598), while a memorial of the Creek Nation on the allotment issue in 1883, was designed to show the effects of allotment on other tribes in the Indian Territory and as far east as New York. The study drew attention to the case of Indian tribes in the Indian Territory and the loss of population associated with the allotting of lands to the tribal members. (New York Indian tribes were the exception, for they held land in common and still lost population, attributable to other causes.)

One of the more impressive reprints contained in the Miscellaneous collection is entitled “The Passing of the Old Indian,” by John M. Oskison, published in an issue of Munsey’s Magazine (Vol. 6, pp. 91293–91310; the date “Apr. 1914” is penciled in on p. 91296). The photographs, by several different photographers, are of Sioux leaders Black Bear, Slow Bull, Hollow Horn Bear, and Red Cloud; the Cheyenne, Little Wolf; the Comanche, Gray Leggings; Nez Percé Chief Joseph; Crow leaders Crane-in-the-Sky and Plenty Coups; and Ute Chief Ouray.

The extensive collection of documentation printed, if not generated, by the Congress on the Five Civilized Tribes is contained in "Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma" (Vol. 104), which comprises reports of the Department of the Interior in support of S. 7625, 62d Cong., 3d sess. This volume includes enrollment and genealogical information perhaps like that of no other up to its time (see Vol. 104, pp. 90234–90903). The materials include issues of citizenship, rolls listing both freedmen and blood members of the tribes, allotments, oil and gas resources, and probate (see also Vol. 111, pp. 98555–98625). On occasion, maps depicting irrigation and geological information were attached to these reports that were transmitted to Congress to justify expenditures of funds.

As overseers of the appropriation bills on expenditures for Indian tribes, the House Committee on Indian Affairs held extensive hearings in the second decade of the twentieth century. These hearings were contemporaneous with Commissioner Cato Sells' tenure. Hearings on the 1913 appropriation bill comprised seven hundred pages (see Vol. 105, pp. 91743–92437). Two of the subjects initially treated were the number of Indians counted by the 1910 federal census and the reservations upon which allotments had been undertaken. The allotment of each reservation was designated as being in various stages of completion. These hearings provide a microcosm of Indian Office and congressional policy making with testimony from commissioners, their aides, and the Board of Indian Commissioners and the congressional response.

One of the more unusual reports included in the Miscellaneous documents (Vol. 125) was "Investigation of Indian Frauds," H. Rep. 98, 42d Cong., 3d sess., March 3, 1873, from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The 742-page report, with accompanying fifty-two-page index, was comprehensive, if not "complete." All manner of correspondents, issues, and claims were recorded. One might examine these pages to determine why Congress thought it necessary to revoke the treaty-making power of the executive in 1871. This report might be reviewed in conjunction with "Alleged Frauds Against Certain Indian Soldiers," H. Rep. 96, 42d Cong., 2d sess., June 8, 1872, from the same committee (see Vol. 124, p. 110686).

Volume 128 covers the years 1919–1921 and devotes its last 431 pages to "Chippewas of Minnesota," a hearing held before the House Committee on Indian Affairs, 66th Cong., 2d sess., January 21–March 22, 1920. This is preceded by a 248-page copy of hearings held before the House Committee on Public Lands, "Grazing Lands in Utah," S. 3016, 66th Cong., 2d sess., "An Act to Authorize the Disposition of Certain Grazing Lands in the State of Utah,..." January 5–7, 1920. Indeed, one-half of the volume comprises these hearings and others on the Crow, Pine Ridge, and Montana Indians.

Volume 129 contains Hampton Institute data, Indian Rights Association (IRA) reports, circulars of regulations issued by the secretary of the interior, Bureau of Ethnology reports, and monographs by the National Indian Defence Association and the Board of Indian Commissioners. These documents date primarily from the mid- to late 1880s. A later example of an Indian Rights Association review of Indian policy is the summary and favorable finding toward newly appointed Commissioner Cato Sells by Secretary of the IRA M. K. Sniffen, in a fourteen-page monograph of May 1914 (see Vol. 104, pp. 90904–90916).

Further notes of the additional documents found in the Miscellaneous series include the Report in the Matter of the Investigation of the White Earth Reservation, which features hearings before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department that were originally printed as House Report 1336, 62d Cong., 3d sess. It is included as Volume 93, part 1 and part 2. These volumes are examples of those that have retained their own internal pagination as printed and are not continually paginated in sequence to the volumes preceding and following. Several other multiple volume materials of congressional documents retain their own pagination as printed. This was done rather than integrating the volumes into the pagination used from the beginning of the series.

Reports of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions, the Indian Rights Association, the National Indian Association, and the Haskell Institute for the late nineteenth and early twentieth century can be found in Volume 76. While including several Department of the Interior printings of regulations for inspectors of the Office of Indian Affairs, Indian statistics, and routes to Indian agencies and schools, the volume also contains material regarding the enrollment of Cherokee freedmen.

Similar kinds of missionary and education reports, along with various Indian association reports, are included in Volume 91, along with “Maps of Segregated Coal Lands,” from districts (1904) in the Indian Territory and the Message of the President...on Economy and Efficiency in the Government Service, House Document 458, 62d Cong., 2d sess., 1912.

NOTE ON SOURCES

The documents comprising this microform publication are from the holdings of the Library of the U.S. Department of the Interior, Washington, D.C.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microfilm publication includes the remainder of Volume 52, Volumes 53 through 138, and the Appendix from the original bound volume collection covering the years 1900 through 1948. A portion of Volume 52 was included in The Native Americans Reference Collection: Documents Collected by the Office of Indian Affairs, Part I, 1840–1900. There are several documents in this collection that are dated earlier than 1900. These have been noted in the reel index.

UPA has microfilmed the volumes as they are arranged at the Interior Department Library. Almost all of the volumes are arranged according to an internal continuous page numbering system. This page number can be found in the top left corner of every page of each volume. The pagination is relatively continuous throughout Volumes 52–128. The documents so numbered are in rough chronological order. These volumes have been rebound a number of times and some now appear to have been incorrectly numbered and/or some volumes were consolidated when rebound so that there are no volumes for certain numbers. Volumes that fall into these categories include Volumes 65–66, 69–70, 73, 81, 87, 93–94, 98, 102–103, 121, and 135. However, there are no gaps in the page numbers where these volumes should exist. Volumes 130–138 and the Appendix have no internal pagination. Volumes 130–134 consist of charters and constitutions arranged alphabetically by tribe. Volumes 136–138 consist of miscellaneous documents relating to Indian affairs. Volume 120 consists exclusively of Indian appropriations documentation for the years 1917–1919. The Appendix comprises documents that were collected by the library but not incorporated into the appropriate bound volume.

REEL INDEX

The following is a list of the documents contained in this collection. Each entry lists the title of the document, its date, and the number of pages. (A frame of microfilm frequently contains two pages of a volume; thus the page count and total number of frames for a document may not be the same.) When available, UPA has provided further information in brackets after the document title concerning the document's subject, tribes involved, or geographic area of coverage. Also provided is information on the document's source, frequently a congressional document. The user is told whether the document is from the House of Representatives (H.R.) or Senate, the type of document (i.e., Executive Document [Ex. Doc.], Report, etc.), its number, the number of the Congress, and the session number (1st, 2d, 3d). Items of added interest or information, such as the location of an index or an item bound out of order, are included in brackets at the end of the text pertaining to a particular document. The user is also referred to the Editorial Note on page xix for further explanation.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following is a list of major subjects, tribes, and states found in The Native Americans Reference Collection, Part II, 1901–1948. Entries for Indian tribes are listed under the tribal name. When the specific reservation name is given in the document, the user will find the information under the reservation name. General material dealing with Indian agents and agencies has been combined. Topics of a general nature relating to Indian affairs, reservations, and/or Indians in general may be found under the subject Native Americans.

The number following the entry is the reel number, and the four-digit number after the colon is the frame number at which the user will find the entry for the subject. The Reel Index that precedes this index provides a full listing of the title of the document, its date when available, and the total number of pages.
