

The Oral History Collection of Columbia University at RSC

This collection of microfiches consists of interviews with numerous people who played an important role in recent American history. The Columbia University Oral History Collection founded in 1948 by journalist and historian Allan Nevins. He believed that history should not only focus on written documents, but also on the private thoughts of individuals in important positions. The Oral History Collection captures these personal beliefs through carefully conducted interviews, making it a unique source for historians. The time period on which the interviewees reflect is roughly 1930-1960.

In total, the six parts of the Oral History Collection includes over a 1000 memoirs. RSC owns a selection of this collection of about 300 interviews. The microfiches of the interviews in the RSC collection are ordered alphabetically. Three special projects are ordered separately. These are the interviews by the Theodore Roosevelt Association, on Social Security, and on the Eisenhower Administration. The other fiches are part of the general collection.

This listing is ordered by subject file. The number in parentheses indicates the volume of the interview in number of microfiches. The roman numerals indicate to which part of the collection the interview belongs. Some interviews function in more than one subject. The collection where the fiches can be found is indicated in italics (e.g. Aiken, George David, Eisenhower Administration (1), III can be found in the Eisenhower Administration collection). For a small number of fiches from part VI we were unable to attach to a subject file.
