SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

Civil Rights During the Carter Administration, 1977–1981, Part 1: Papers of the Special Assistant for Black Affairs, Section C brings together a large set of documents on significant civil rights issues, events, and personalities during the 1977–1981 presidency of Jimmy Carter.

The documents are those collected by the office of Louis E. Martin, special assistant to the president, who oversaw the Carter administration's handling of civil rights issues and minority affairs and kept a close eye on the views of black Americans on Carter's policies. The collection documents focus predominantly on economic and social issues—especially those involving discrimination—that affected black Americans and other minorities.

The documents in the collection consist of internal White House memoranda, correspondence from and reports by individuals and private organizations, newspaper articles and editorials, press conference transcripts, press releases, correspondence between White House and federal agency officials, government reports, lists of contacts, and invitation lists for major events.

The collection includes material about, or written or spoken by, prominent personalities including President Jimmy Carter; former President Richard M. Nixon; Vice President Walter F. Mondale; Special Assistant to the President Louis E. Martin and his key aides Julia M. Dobbs, I. Ray Miller Jr., and Karen W. Zuniga; administration officials Elizabeth Abramowitz, Mary F. Berry, Zbigniew Brzezinski, Joseph A. Califano Jr., Benjamin R. Civiletti, Stuart E. Eizenstat, Ernest G. Green, Sidney Harman, Patricia R. Harris, Luther H. Hodges Jr., Juanita M. Kreps, James T. McIntyre Jr., Martha M. Mitchell, Achsah Nesmith, Jody Powell, Charles Schultze, Jack Watson, A. Vernon Weaver, Sarah Weddington, Anne Wexler, and Andrew Young; congressional representatives Shirley Chisholm, Cardiss Collins, Walter E. Fauntroy, Augustus F. Hawkins, and Parren J. Mitchell; nongovernment leaders Ralph Abernathy, Berkeley G. Burrell, Maurice A. Dawkins, Ofield Dukes, Cornbread Givens, Aaron E. Henry, M. Carl Holman, Benjamin Hooks, Jesse L. Jackson, Vernon E. Jordan Jr., Coretta Scott King, Augustine R. Marusi, Clarence Mitchell, Bayard Rustin, and Leon H. Sullivan; and black figures Muhammad Ali, Frederick Douglass, and W. E. B. DuBois.

A useful feature of the collection is its inclusion of documents about, or written by, some important black leaders and officials of the 1970s and 1980s for which little information is currently available through Internet searches. These leaders include Randolph T. Blackwell, the director of the Office of Minority Business Enterprise (OMBE); Cornbread Givens, the head of the Poor People's Development Foundation; and Louis E. Martin's influential deputies Karen W. Zuniga and Julia M. Dobbs.

Researchers interested in the multiplicity of viewpoints held by minorities, as well as the organizations they formed to advance them, will welcome the collection's compilation of documents from a large number of minority associations and institutions, particularly black organizations, on discrimination, economic development, equal opportunity, and related issues. Officials from these groups often present forceful program proposals to President Carter or Louis Martin, and express their approval or disapproval of administration policies.

These organizations include Afro-American Patrolmen's League, African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, American Association for Affirmative Action, American Association of Blacks in Energy, American Association of MESBICs, American Jewish Congress, American Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, Associated Minority Contractors of America, Black Alliance To Re-Elect Carter, black colleges, Black Leadership Forum, Booker T. Washington Foundation, Businessmen's Committee for the Federalization of Welfare, Center for Community Change, Committee for Concerned Blacks, Concerned Clergy for Carter, Congress of National Black Churches, Congressional Black Caucus, Council for Opportunity in Graduate Management Education, Federation of Southern Cooperatives, Guardians Association, Joint Center for Political Studies, Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, National Alliance of Postal and Federal Employees, National Association for Equal Opportunity in Higher Education, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) and the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, National Association of Black Manufacturers, National Association of Media Women, National Bar Association, National Black MBA Association, National Black Police Association, National Black Network, National Black Veterans Organization, National Conference on a Black Agenda for the 1980s, National Business League, National Caucus on the Black Aged, National Conference of Artists, National Conference of Black Mayors, National Consortium for Black Professional Development, National Council of Negro Women, National Insurance Association, National Inventors Hall of Fame, National Newspaper Publishers Association, National Office for Black Catholics, National Telecommunications Conference, National Urban Coalition, National Urban League, Opportunities Industrialization Centers, Poor People's Development Foundation, People United To Save Humanity, Southern Rural Action, Southern Rural Policy Congress, Summit on Black Concerns, United Negro College Fund, Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program, and Working Women's Labor Day Challenge.

The following sections outline the major topics covered by this collection.

Social Issues

The Carter years saw black Americans and members of other minorities make significant progress toward equal treatment and opportunity in various social realms, even as they continued to confront entrenched discrimination in certain areas. In education, President Carter ordered the implementation of a Black College Initiative, which was designed to increase dramatically the involvement of federal agencies with historically black colleges and universities. This program expanded federal support of the colleges through means such as grants for the construction of research libraries or medical schools, as well as the provision of federal agency research and development contracts. Louis Martin and his deputy Karen W. Zuniga found it a challenging endeavor to persuade federal agencies such as the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) and the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) to devote sufficient resources to meet the initiative goals that the president had set for them.

Other administration education initiatives covered in the collection include science apprenticeships for minority students, technical assistance to black colleges, and minority fellowships in graduate management education.

Black Americans by no means relied on the federal government to take full responsibility for improving the quality of education. In Oakland, California, for example, Public Schools Superintendent Ruth B. Love initiated a program to bring famous persons to the Oakland school system as artists, writers, or scholars in residence (Reel 13, Frame 0270). These celebrities included James Baldwin, Eugene A. Cernan, Alex Haley, Daniel “Chappie” James, Coretta Scott King, Annie Dodge Wauneka, and Andrew Young. Elsewhere, black organizations such as the National Urban League and Opportunities Industrialization Centers operated education and training centers in urban areas.

In other social arenas, collection authors review whistleblowing on problems in Department of Housing and Urban Development housing programs, as well as public housing and rent assistance. Community development and neighborhood revitalization receive attention in a number of reports, with authors discussing federal urban programs, the suburban movement of black Americans, the displacement of poor and minority inner city residents by higher income newcomers, the National Urban League’s Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program, and the efforts of neighborhood associations to help residents “take back” their communities.

To help provide productive activity for unemployed youth, among other reasons, Louis Martin favored the establishment of a universal peacetime national service program. As one proponent argued, “Rather than being victims of universal service, America’s youth might benefit most of all. They have grown up in the disillusioning times of Vietnam and Watergate. Little is asked of them now, except that they be consumers of goods and services. The inevitable results: political cynicism, feelings of powerlessness, and the corrosive ‘I’ll get mine’ materialism so rampant on college campuses today” (Reel 10, Frame 0165).

Blacks and other minorities expressed concern over the proposed increases in immigration quotas to allow more refugees to enter the United States. In one letter to Carter, Office of Management and Budget Director James T. McIntyre Jr. offers his views on the political implications of alternative raised immigration quotas for refugees. McIntyre believed that an increase in the number of Southeast Asian refugees would “raise serious domestic problems among the black and Hispanic communities and among selected state and local governments. Resentment will surely result from an Administration proposal to increase the number of additional refugees brought to the U.S., [with] the attendant higher budget costs, given the 1980 budget’s proposed reductions in several social service programs affecting disadvantaged Americans” (Reel 7, Frame 1003).

Several authors examine alternative proposals to establish a system of universal national health insurance. Authors express concern that under certain proposals, many poor and minority citizens might be excluded from coverage.

Environmental protection and pollution receives some coverage in the collection. On the subject of federally established wilderness areas, the American Association of Blacks in Energy has this to say: “What is unique about Interior’s parks and Agriculture’s recreational areas is that, unlike “wilderness,” one can have access to them by conventional transportation modes. Unlike wilderness, there is no need to incur the expense of owning horses, canoes, and elaborate backpacking gear with accoutrements starting at $200 per person and up. . . . Wilderness, with its very tight, limiting restrictions and difficult access, will ipso facto exclude an overwhelming majority of black and other minorities . . . yet minorities will be taxed like all other citizens for the maintenance of [wilderness]" (Reel 9, Frame 0042).

Economic Problems

The Carter administration made a serious commitment to help back Americans and other minorities move toward economic parity with whites. In particular, the administration devoted considerable energy and resources to initiatives designed to encourage the formation of minority-owned businesses and put them on an equal footing with corporations owned or managed by the dominant culture. These programs were administered by the Small Business Administration, the Economic Development Administration, the Office of Minority Business Enterprise, the Community Services Administration (CSA), the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy, and other agencies. These programs focused primarily on increasing the government's procurement of goods and services from minority business, as well as through requirements for procurement by federal contractors from minority firms. The aided industries ranged from construction to manufacturing to advertising, banking, and insurance. The government also maintained a program to help minority-owned exporters gain footholds in foreign markets.

Private industry had its own programs to foster the growth of minority business. Augustine R. Marusi, chief executive officer of Borden, Inc., and Brooks McCormick, chairman of International Harvester, led the drive by the National Minority Purchasing Council, a group of private corporations, to increase corporate purchases from minority firms (the council is today called National Minority Supplier Development Council). Prominent corporate executives also led efforts to enlist support for the Joint Center for Political Studies, an influential black think tank that conducted research on policy issues.

In an interesting private initiative to stimulate minority business growth, black public relations executive Ofield Dukes attempted successfully to induce the Carter administration to build the credibility of the national Minority Bank Deposit Program by supporting a D.C. Minority Bank Deposit Program, in part as a demonstration project to show the benefits of the program to minority banks. Dukes additionally advised the black members of the National Bankers Association on how best to make use of their fifteen minutes of time in a meeting with President Carter (Reel 5, Frame 303).

In a large number of collection documents, black leaders and organizations expressed serious concern, sometimes even outrage, over what they perceived as the Carter administration's strategy to attack inflation by cutting federal spending. These individuals and groups feared that the budget cuts would deplete social programs benefiting minorities and the poor, even as Louis Martin, President Carter, Vice President Walter F. Mondale, and others tried to reassure them that funding for the neediest citizens would not be reduced.

A number of authors examine the entrenched problem of employment discrimination against black Americans and other minorities in industries including construction, law enforcement, railroads, and television and motion pictures. Authors critically evaluate efforts by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and other agencies to promulgate and enforce anti-discrimination regulations. OMBE Director Randolph T. Blackwell charged that "institutional racism" plagued Labor Department aid to manpower training programs such as Project Hire, established to provide funds to employers to hire and train unemployed veterans. As Blackwell noted, “This HIRE program was restricted to firms that could hire at least 500 or more workers. Practically all minority firms were, therefore, excluded from this program because few, if any, minority firms are large enough to hire 500 new employees” (Reel 13, Frame 0133).

Black leaders and organizations, as well as Louis Martin and President Carter, saw the high rate of unemployment among youth, especially black youth, as the country’s most urgent social problem. The administration established or expanded a number of programs to provide both jobs and job training for the unemployed, such as the Summer Youth Employment Program, a minority students’ research apprenticeship program, and Jobs for Youth. The last program was a joint public-private partnership between federal agencies and Opportunities Industrialization Centers (OIC), a private organization headed by Leon H. Sullivan. Sullivan’s group had an ambitious goal: to train and then place 100,000 youths in permanent private and public sector jobs.

Rev. Sullivan fought against cuts in federal youth employment and training programs, including those conducted in partnership with OIC. Sullivan pleaded, “I am calling on members of the President’s National Employment and Training Commission, the domestic policy staff, the President himself, and the leaders of the Senate and House to make our youth a number one priority and develop a comprehensive national youth policy. I want them to make the same effort to find the money and cut the red tape on this crisis as they did to get Egypt and Israel to agree on a peace treaty to solve the Middle East crisis” (Reel 12, Frame 0877).

Political Issues

Many black Americans believed that the black vote had provided the margin of victory for Jimmy Carter in the 1976 presidential election. By 1979, however, a large portion of the black electorate seems to have become disenchanted with the administration’s performance, especially as it affected minority groups and the poor. The dissatisfaction became especially vocal after the administration announced the FY1980 budget: black leaders denounced what they saw as deep cuts in pro-minority programs like employment and training programs as well as aid to minority business. Obviously worried that the Carter-Mondale ticket would lose a key source of support, Louis Martin and other White House officials arranged White House briefings with key minority constituent groups, such as black clergy from selected “swing” states like Ohio, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania. During these briefings, officials tried to persuade the attendees that the Carter administration indeed still cared about the poor, and that its record was far more pro-poor than many anti-Carter groups and leaders cared to admit. A typical briefing started with Martin remarks to the invited group, proceeded to substantive discussions with appropriate Cabinet secretaries or assistant secretaries, and sometimes ended with a ten- or fifteen-minute “drop-by” with President Carter. The collection includes a significant body of information on these briefings.

After Carter lost the 1980 presidential election to Ronald Reagan, Louis Martin submitted to the president an extensive list of names of black leaders that Carter could meet with to discuss, among other things, “the efforts of GOP reactionaries on the Hill to scuttle civil rights laws and the need for your active support in fighting them.” Carter’s handwritten response on the letter: “I prefer a private meeting—no press—consisting of the underlined names.” Carter had underlined ten of the twenty suggested names (Reel 17, Frame 0871).

The collection also includes some interesting documents not specifically about minorities that provide glimpses into the high-level workings of the Carter White House. Speechwriter Gerald Rafshoon wrote to top White House officials on promoting the president’s State of the Union address: “It is important that the State of the Union speech be ‘sold’ properly. . . . The ‘new foundation’ theme will certainly be ridiculed to some extent by commentators and cartoonists. It is important that we not retreat from it so that six months from now people will say, ‘Remember that ‘new foundation’ thing Carter tried? Whatever happened to that?’ The theme will hold up in the long run if we stick to it” (Reel 20, Frame 0027).

An interesting bit of political advocacy was delivered by Pope John Paul II during his visit to the United States in 1979. During remarks with Carter on the White House south lawn, the pope endorses and amplifies Carter’s concerns with world issues like peace and nuclear disarmament. He then expresses a view on global inequality, however, that goes further than Carter and seems directed at the United States and other wealthy nations: “Since people are suffering under international inequality, there can be no question of giving up the pursuit of international solidarity, even if it involves a notable change in the attitudes and lifestyles of those blessed with a larger share of the world’s goods” (Reel 18, Frame 0373).

A persistent theme that runs throughout the collection concerns the continuing economic, social, and political domination of black Americans and other minorities by a predominant white culture. One document quotes black abolitionist Frederick Douglass on the de facto continuing slavery of southern Blacks after emancipation: “[Emancipation] did not deprive the old master of the power of life and death which was the soul of the relation of master and slave. [The old masters] could not of course sell them, but they retained the power to starve them to death, and wherever this power is held, there is the power of slavery. He who can say to his fellow man, ‘You shall serve me or starve’ is a master, and his subject is a slave” (Reel 14, Frame 0277).

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 7: 0811 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0811 of Reel 7. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

Civil Rights During the Carter Administration, 1977–1981, Part 1: Papers of the Special Assistant for Black Affairs, Section C brings together a large set of documents on significant civil rights issues, events, and personalities during the 1977–1981 presidency of Jimmy Carter.

The documents are those collected by the office of Louis E. Martin, special assistant to the president, who oversaw the Carter administration's handling of civil rights issues and minority affairs and kept a close eye on the views of black Americans on Carter's policies.

The Carter years saw black Americans and members of other minorities make significant progress toward equal treatment and opportunity in various social realms such as education, housing, and employment, even as they continued to confront entrenched discrimination in certain areas.

The Carter administration made a serious commitment to help back Americans and other minorities move toward economic parity with whites. In particular, the administration devoted considerable energy and resources to initiatives designed to encourage the formation of minority-owned businesses and put them on an equal footing with corporations owned or managed by the dominant culture.

In a large number of collection documents, black leaders and organizations expressed serious concern, even outrage, over what they perceived as the Carter administration's strategy to attack inflation by cutting federal spending. These individuals and groups feared that budget cuts would deplete social programs benefiting minorities and the poor, even as Louis Martin, President Carter, Vice President Walter F. Mondale, and others tried to reassure them that funding for the neediest citizens would not be reduced.
