Introduction Fulbright Archives, 1949-2016

In September 1945 James William Fulbright, Democratic freshman senator from Arkansas, launched the idea to foster international understanding by organizing a worldwide system of academic exchanges. Fulbright brilliantly proposed to use the proceeds from the sale of surplus war equipment in foreign countries after World War II. Within a year, President Harry S. Truman signed the Fulbright Act, which allowed 35 students to study in the US and 65 American students to go abroad the following year. Since then the program has expanded with many bilateral agreements. It has so far offered more than 300,000 students, researchers, and teachers the opportunity to study or teach abroad.

In 1949, the bilateral USEF (United States Educational Foundation) was established in Amsterdam as the Dutch counterpart to the American organization. Since then it has changed its name twice. USEF became NACEE (Netherlands America Committee for Educational Exchange) in 1972. NACEE in turn became the Fulbright Center in 2004. Its rich archives consists of more than 250 boxes with documentation on the goals, the means, and the results of this program for scholarly and educational exchange between the US and the Netherlands.

This introduction to the Fulbright Archive aims:

- a) to provide background information on the Fulbright Archive and the Fulbright Program itself;
- b) to clarify the contents of the Fulbright archive;
- c) to provide some research guidelines on the contents.

The collection offers documentation from 1949, the founding year of the Dutch-American exchange program, up to the 1990s. Candidates' files and general program material are present starting from 1985. This is, broadly speaking, the case with Graduate Students, PhD Students, Scholars, and the Direct Teachers Exchange (DTE). Apart from the DTE, which was terminated for practical reasons in 1996, these programs are still running today. NACEE/FB has also served as a vehicle for grants coming from other organizations, such as the Netherland-America Foundation and IIE/CSP.

The collection came to the Roosevelt Study Center (RSC) in Middelburg in 2007 when the Fulbright Center in Amsterdam ran out of space and looked for a safe depository for its historical archives. The RSC was a logical place for these holdings, since this research institute is a key player in Dutch-American scholarly relations and has access to professional archival storage space. Eight interns, mostly graduate students at the M.A. level, processed the materials following the categories which drs. M. Oomen, the director of the Fulbright Center, had designed for practical purposes in the 1990s.<sup>1</sup>

The archive has been divided into seven general sections: Section A contains annual program plans and reports, along with the minutes of Board and Executive Committee meetings and staff meetings. Section B contains the correspondence with NACEE's sponsors, on both sides of the Atlantic. Section C contains financial documents. The preservation policy here is to preserve the general financial reports, but not the underlying administration. Section D contains assessment reports. Section E contains material on non-program external contacts and publicity material.

The largest part of the archives is the correspondence on the programs, listed in section F. Most of the material in this section consists of candidates' files, with general program information and lists of grantees making up the rest. The grantees' files are organized by year and by name. The files contain the CV's of the applicants, the subject of their research, their academic connections and their ambitions. Researchers can find information about developments in disciplines, the networks of universities, cultural reflections on both Dutch and American cultures, the educational value of exchanges for research and both high school and university settings.

Please note - use of files containing personal information is tied to privacy regulations (see privacy clause below).

Section G is a good place to begin any research since it contains the historical sources on the foundation and development of the NACEE and the Fulbright Center. It also contains reflections of alumni of the Fulbright Program and speeches by and on Senator Fulbright.

Researchers who are interested in USEF/NACEE/Fulbright in a more general way have several places they can look. Section G is the most obvious one, as it contains historical documents. These range from a collection of documents about an earlier exchange organization, the Netherland-America Foundation from the period 1920-1940, to personal collections of alumni. Other interesting parts of the archive are the program plans and the Board minutes. Material from the first years of USEF is relatively scarce, but the Board minutes are complete. These files reveal the stake-holders in the Netherlands and the United States and describe the broadening of the strategies to reach new target groups as well as the termination of programs which were considered obsolete or ineffective. The archives have more to offer than only bilateral information. The files in A.5 Fulbright Conferences of Executive Officers, place the Netherlands in a larger context of international educational exchanges.

Evaluations of the programs can be found in category D.1, which includes both internal and external research reports. In addition, section E offers examples of Fulbright anniversaries. Researchers interested in the working of specific activities can best turn to the 'Programs' section. Those interested in the spread of the program and the self-evaluation will benefit from examining Section E, which consists of promotional material.

In sum, the Fulbright Archives is a valuable source, for researchers interested in international educational exchange, public diplomacy, Dutch-American relations, and cultural studies.

Procedure to request access to files containing personal data in the Fulbright Archive

There are restrictions for those who want to consult files containing personal information.

Boxes 61- 120, 132-166, 175-192, 194-251, 263-270, 272-286, 288-299, 312-316, 319-325 are restricted. Boxes 259, 262, 300 and 303 are partly restricted. Further restrictions to other boxes that contain personal information may apply. Because of these restrictions, the Fulbright archive can only be visited accompanied by a staff member of the RIAS.

These restrictions are adapted from the protocols of the National Archives in The Hague. Those who want to request access to files containing personal data must write a request that:

1. demonstrates that the person in question has passed away; or
2. demonstrates that the person in question has authorized the request; or
3. demonstrates that the consultation is needed for legal reasons; or
4. demonstrates that consultation is vital for international legal obligations; or
5. demonstrates that consultation is vital for academic or statistical research by submitting a research plan including a justification for the research, the research question, the purpose of the project, its composition and an explanation how the privacy of the still living persons will be protected

No evidence of death is needed when the year of birth of the person in question is more than one hundred years ago. Evidence that the person has passed away could be:

- A document of the Municipal Registry Office
- A copy of the personal record card, available at the Central Bureau for Genealogy in The Hague
- If need be another kind of document that proves that the person passed away, such as an obituary.

When the researcher wants to consult the documents of a still-living person, an undersigned notification which states that the person has no objections is then compulsory. In that case a (copy of) identify card of the person needs to be included.

Note that, as decided by Fulbright, the references that are part of most documents are considered private. In order for a researcher to see them, they must have written permission from the person who wrote the reference, not from the person the reference was about.

The Roosevelt Institute for American Studies (RIAS) will oversee access to the restricted files according to the above-stated rules and conditions. Whenever an institute/person is given authority to access the documents, he/she is responsible for the way he/she works with the documents. Researchers, however, have the legal duty not to harm the reputations of the subjects still living.

Requests to consult the archive can be sent to info@roosevelt
